THEN CAME THE WAR:

Col. House Reveals, Step by Step, How President Wilson Finally Decided Neutrality Was No Longer Possible And How He Prepared His Appeal to Congress for Action

"He Had Fought With Himself, Night After Night, in the Hope of Seeing Some Other Way Out," Chronicles His Confidant—Cabinet Ignored Altogether in Deciding on War Message — Wilson Mistrusted His Ability to Be a War Leader, House's Diary Says.

THE final chapter in "The Recollections of Col. House" is printed today. It deals with the last few trying days of neutrality, with President Wilson struggling to find a way out of participation in the war. It tells of his labor to present the problem to Congress and the public, the writing of his famous war message without consultation of the Cabinet, and of his secret distrust of his ability to be a war leader.

Helping Wilson to Prepare "Greatest Speech in His Career"

"ON the following day Wilson took up with House the substance of the message to Congress on April 2, in which he was to ask them to declare the existence of a state of war. It is interesting to note that only five days before giving this, the greatest speech of his career, the President had done no more than jot down the topics he meant to treat. Actual phraseology he left to the last minute."

"Since last night," wrote House, "he had made a memorandum of the subjects he thought proper to incorporate and which I approved. He will differentiate between the German people and those who have led them into this disaster. I advised the British Government to do this, but they never acted upon it, and I hope it is to be done now.

"My purpose was, and is, to break down the German Government by building a fire back of it within Germany. This is the main note I have urged him to strike; that is, this is a war for democracy and it is a war for the other nations.

"The President read the address to me, and I suggested his eliminating a phrase which read something like this: 'Until the German people have a Government we can trust.' He was doubtful about this part of the sentence and I had no difficulty in persuading him to eliminate it.

"I asked him why he had not shown the Cabinet his address. He replied that if he had, every man in it would have had a suggestion to make and it would have been picked to pieces if he had heeded their criticism."

THE country was, in truth, waiting for the President to lead. On the very day following his address to Congress, in which he declared that the overt act had not yet occurred, a submarine sank the Cunard liner Laconia without warning. Twelve persons perished—of whom two, both women, were American citizens. A fortnight later, on March 12, the American steamer Algonquin, carrying foodstuffs from New York for London, was sunk without warning; although the crew made safe their escape, and, after 27 hours in open boats, reached the Scilly Isles. A week later, on Monday, March 19, word came that within 24 hours three American ships had been sunk by submarines, and that in the case of one, the Vigilancia, 15 members of the crew had been lost.

Wilson's delay in taking more decisive action than that implied by "armed neutrality" aroused bitter comment abroad and uneasiness at home.

Ambassador W. H. Page to Col. House.

(Telegram)

LONDON, March 9, 1917.

I find that continued delay in sending out American ships, especially American liners, is producing an increasingly unfavorable impression. . . . Delay is taken to mean the submission of our Government to the German blockade. . . . There is a tendency, even in high Government circles, to regard the reasons for delay which are published here as technicalities which a national crisis should sweep aside. British opinion couples the delay of our ships with the sinking of the Laconia and the Zimmermann telegram, and seems to be reaching the conclusion that our Government will not be able to take positive action under any provocation. The feeling which the newspaper dispatches from the United States produce on the British mind is that our Government is holding back our people until the blockade of our ships, the Zimmermann telegram and the Laconia shall be forgotten and until the British navy shall overcome the German submarines. There is danger that this feeling harden into a conviction and interfere with any influence that we might otherwise have when peace comes.

So friendly a man as Viscount Grey of Fallodon writes me privately from his retirement "I do not see how the United States can sit still while neutral shipping is swept off the sea. If no action is taken, it will be like a great blot in history or a failure that must grievously depress the future history of America."

PAGE.

"Billy Phillips came from Washington," wrote House on March 9, "to deliver some messages from the Secretary and Frank Polk. Fortunately, the main things the Secretary wanted, the President had already done a few hours ago; that is, he gave the order for arming of merchantmen and called Congress in executive session."

"March 19, 1917: ——— called me twice from Washington," wrote Colonel House. "He is disturbed at the President's inertia, and he and Lansing wish me to come to Washington to see if I cannot stir him into action. Both . . . wish Congress called immediately. I doubt whether this is wise. The President has authority now to do what is necessary to prepare the country before a declaration of war, and it is to our advantage to make some preparation before hostilities begin. Our coastwise shipping might find itself in a bad way if war were declared suddenly.

"March 20, 1917: X was my first caller. He is disturbed because there is not more activity in Washington and because the President has no well-defined policy of action. He believes there will be an unfavorable reaction against the President unless he formulates a plan and announces it, at least to his closest advisers, and follows it vigorously."

Wilson was evidently persuaded of the need to call Congress at once; but, although he wanted the opinion of the Cabinet, he showed no inclination to share his with them.

"March 22, 1917: Gregory," recorded House, "told of the last Cabinet meeting (March 20). He thinks the President had no idea of calling Congress together earlier than the sixteenth, but was persuaded to call it on the second of April because of the unanimous opinion of the Cabinet that he should do so. He said Burleson remarked that the people wished this country to go into the war actively. The President replied that it did not make so much difference what the people wished as what was right. Burleson answered that, if he were President and a situation like this arose, he would want the opinion of the people back of him.

"The President gave no intimation to the Cabinet as to what he intended to do, but early next morning he called Congress for April 2. When Gregory telephoned yesterday at 10 o'clock, to tell me he would be in New York today, he did not then know that the President had made the call.

"——— came in the afternoon to talk over departmental matters and to tell of the situation in Washington. He says there was something akin to panic there in the early part of the week and that there was a feeling in governmental circles that, if the President did not act promptly, a strike would come about in Cabinet and official circles. He states that Secretary Baker is now belligerent, but the condition of army affairs has not been bettered materially in the last few months. He believes if war is declared there will be great weakness shown in the War Department, as well as in the Navy, and the President will come in for an avalanche of criticism."

"March 24, 1917: Lansing has no idea what the President has in mind to say in his address to Congress when it convenes. He saw the President yesterday and tried in several ways to get some line upon his thought, but failed. He wishes me to write the President and tell him what I think should be done, believing my advice will be along the lines of his, Lansing's, views. He is as anxious as I am that the President should take the reins in his own hands and not allow Congress to run away with the situation."

House was sure of the President's final decision. On March 21 he wrote to Page:

"So far as we are concerned, we are in the war now, even though a formal declaration may not occur until after Congress meets April 2. All the departments are preparing as rapidly as possible, but, even so, it will take time to get in a position where the Germans cannot destroy our coastwise shipping in the event they have submarines lurking near our coasts."

Much of the influence which the Colonel exercised over President Wilson resulted from his invariable refusal to become excited or to press arguments upon him. When he finally decided that the time had come for him to discuss matters with Wilson, his announcement contained no reference to the riddle that was driving the capital mad, and it might be described as unostentatious.

Col. House to the President.

New York, March 25, 1917.

Dear Governor:

If it is convenient to you I will come down on Tuesday, for there are some things I would like to talk over with you. . . .

President Wilson and Col. House photographed together shortly after the passage of the resolution declaring a state of war existed between this country and Germany.

Will you not telegraph me upon receipt of this, whether it is convenient for me to come or whether you would prefer another time? Affectionately yours,

E. M. HOUSE.

The Colonel did not wait for a reply. On the following day he had a long interview with Howard Coffin of the Council of National Defense, which disturbed him greatly. The interview, he recorded, "definitely determined me to go Washington tomorrow, to talk things out with the President. I am also anxious to talk with him concerning his message to Congress, which in some ways will be the most important one he has yet delivered."

House found the President at last decided that there was no escape from war. He had fought with himself, night after night, in the hope of seeing some other way out. "What else can I do?" said Wilson. "Is there anything else I can do?"

"March 27, 1917. I took the 11:08 for Washington," recorded House. "I had a quiet and restful trip. Frank Polk met me at the station and took me to the White House. The President was waiting for me. He had just finished with the Cabinet meeting, which he now holds in the afternoon. He was not well and complained of a headache. We went to his study and discussed matters, particularly his forthcoming message.

"The President asked whether I thought he should ask Congress to declare war, or whether he should say that a state of war exists and ask them for the necessary means to carry it on. I advised the latter. I was afraid of an acrimonious debate if he put it up to Congress to declare war.

"I told him a crisis had come in his administration different from anything he had yet encountered, and I was anxious that he should meet it in a creditable way so that his influence would not be lessened when he came to do the great work which would necessarily follow the war. I said it was not as difficult a situation as many he had already successfully met, but that it was one for which he was not well fitted. He admitted this and said he did not believe he was fitted for the presidency under such conditions. I thought he was too refined, too civilized, too intellectual, too cultivated not to see the incongruity and absurdity of war. It needs a man of coarse fiber and one less a philosopher than the President to conduct a brutal, vigorous and successful war."

Having pictured Wilson's disabilities to his face, with a tact which saved the President's temper and a frankness that would have surprised those who insisted that he could listen to nothing but adulation, the Colonel proceeded to enhearten him by indicating the advantages of his position and by reviewing the previous domestic success of his administration.

"I made him feel, as Mrs. Wilson told me later, that he was not up against so difficult a proposition as he had imagined," recorded House. "In my argument I said that everything that he had to meet in this emergency had been thought out time and time again in other countries, and all we had to do was to take experience as our guide and not worry over the manner of doing it. I thought it not so difficult as taking a more or less ignorant, disorganized party in Congress and forcing it to pass the Federal Reserve act, the tariff act, the Panama tolls act and such other legislation as he had got through.

"I felt that he had taken a gamble that there would be no war, and had lost; and the country would hold it to his discredit unless he prosecuted the war successfully. . . . He listened with a kindly and sympathetic attention and, while he argued with me upon many of the points, he did it dispassionately."

President Wilson leading parade of the first men in Washington drafted for service in the war.

On the following day Wilson took up with House the substance of the message to Congress on April 2, in which he was to ask them to declare the existence of a state of war. It is interesting to note that only five days before giving this, the greatest speech of his career, the President had done no more than jot down the topics he meant to treat. Actual phraseology he left to the last minute.

"Since last night," wrote House, "he had made a memorandum of the subjects he thought proper to incorporate and which I approved. He will differentiate between the German people and those who have led them into this disaster. I advised the British Government to do this, but they never acted upon it, and I hope it is to be done now. My purpose was, and is, to break down the German Government by building a fire back of it within Germany. This is the main note I have urged him to strike; that is, this is a war for democracy and it is a war for the other nations.

"The President played golf this morning," Col. House noted on March 28, "and McAdoo was my first caller. He remained practically all morning and until I told him I had to leave in order to see the President, who had returned and was waiting in his study. McAdoo wants war—war to the hilt. He said his appetite for it was so strong that he would like to quit the Cabinet, raise a regiment, and go to the front. All three of his sons have enlisted. We talked of how to finance the war and the kind of revenue bill we should have in order to meet expenses.

People Behind President.

"March 31, 1917: Edward G. Lowry came to tell the result of his observations in a two weeks' trip through Kansas and Missouri. He believes the people do not wish war but that they will follow the President. He said in Missouri they do not seem to know what it is all about. This is the pathos of the thing, and what is true there is true largely all over the world."

On April 1 House took the night train again from New York for Washington.

"I arrived in time for breakfast," he recorded. "The President and Mrs. Wilson were ready to play golf, and I saw him for a moment only. While he was on the links I motored with Frank Polk and we discussed pending matters.

"McAdoo telephoned and asked about the address and how I liked it. I evaded a direct answer by saying that from what the President had told me of it I thought it would meet every expectation.

"The President read the address to me, and I suggested his eliminating a phrase which read something like this: 'Until the German people have a Government we can trust.' He was doubtful about this part of the sentence and I had no difficulty in persuading him to eliminate it. It looked too much like inciting revolution. It is needless to say that no address he has yet made pleases me more than this one. . . . I have tried to get the President, as my letters will show, to demand among nations the same code of honor and morals as between individuals. He handles this part superbly. . . .

"I asked him why he had not shown the Cabinet his address. He replied that, if he had, every man in it would have had some suggestion to make and it would have been picked to pieces if he had heeded their criticism. He said he preferred to keep it to himself and take the responsibility. I feel that he does his Cabinet an injustice. . . . I have noticed recently that he holds a tighter rein over his Cabinet and that he is impatient of any initiative on their part."

Asks Congress for State of War.

On the evening of April 2, Wilson appeared before Congress to ask that they declare the existence of a state of war between the United States and Germany. Whatever his hesitation had been, now that he gave the signal for action his leadership was hailed with delight. "Congress," said press reports, "roared cheer after cheer in an outburst of patriotic enthusiasm."

"The present German submarine warfare against commerce," said Wilson, "is a warfare against mankind. It is a war against all nations. . . . Each nation must decide for itself how it will meet it. The choice we make for ourselves must be made with a moderation of counsel and a temperateness of judgment befitting our character and our motives as a nation. We must put excited feeling away. Our motive will not be revenge or the victorious assertion of the physical might of the nation, but only the vindication of right, of human right, of which we are only a single champion. . . . There is one choice we cannot make, we are incapable of making: we will not choose the path of submission. With a profound sense of the solemn and even tragical character of the step I am taking and of the grave responsibilities which it involves, but in unhesitating obedience to what I deem my constitutional duty, I advise that the Congress declare the recent course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government and people of the United States."

Having made his decision, Wilson began to escape from the agony of uncertainty which had caught him; but not until he finished his speech and realized the strength of opinion that supported his policy did he completely regain the confidence necessary to firm leadership. On the afternoon of April 1 he told Frank Cobb of "The World" that he had never been so uncertain about anything in his life as that decision.

"The President was apparently calm during the day," recorded House on April 2, "but, as a matter of fact, I could see signs of nervousness. Neither of us did anything except kill time until he was called to the Capitol. In the morning he told me he was determined not to speak after 3 o'clock, believing it would make a bad impression—an

Here's the Secret

"I wish that every woman with a drunken husband, son or brother, could read these lines, for they tell the secret of reform and happiness. I was a confirmed drunkard. I drank good whiskey when the country was 'wet' and 'moonshine' when it went 'dry.' I became a sot, a disgrace to my family, an outcast from society. My wife and children were hungry, ragged, in despair.

"Then my good wife read of the Golden Treatment and sent for a free trial package. I didn't know she was giving it to me, but I noticed that all at once my craving for drink began to go. Before long I positively disliked any kind of liquor, and we threw my flask out of the window.

"Now I am a total abstainer, my family is happy, well fed, well clothed and proud of me and I am prospering finely—all because of the wonderful Golden Treatment."

BRITISH EXPEDITION SEEKS MAYA RUINS

Party Following Up Discoveries in Central America Last Year.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, March 13.—Mayan ruins on British soil in Central America are the objectives of an expedition under T. A. Joyce, deputy keeper of the department of ethnography of the British Museum, London, and F. A. Mitchell-Hedges, now in the field, on a voyage of exploration in British Honduras.

The expedition is an outcome of the interest of the results obtained by Mitchell-Hedges last year, when he was accompanied by T. W. Gann, the authority on Central American archeology, and spent some months in exploring the ancient cities of the Maya. One of the most remarkable monuments discovered by him was a vast amphitheater which is like nothing else known in America.

A great deal of the work done was of a pioneer character, and did little more than clear away the jungle, but it was possible to conclude that the remains belonged to two periods, of which the work of the earlier was of a much higher character than that of the later. In the former were found blocks covered with painted stucco, which evidently had been introduced into the work but belonged to a still earlier period. The buildings were probably ceremonial. At any rate, they showed no sign of military defenses.

It may be expected tha tthe present expedition will obtain much information which should be of value both in itself and in assisting to clear up some of the problems of archeology and history in the other states of Mexico and Central America.

THE INTIMATE PAPERS OF COL. HOUSE

impression that he was unduly pressing matters. I thought differently and persuaded him that he should hold himself ready to address Congress whenever that body indicated their readiness to hear him. It turned out that he began to speak at 20 minutes to 9 and finished in about 32 minutes. I timed him carefully.

"We had early dinner, at 6:30, for word had come that Congress had been organized and would be ready to receive him at 8 o'clock. We talked of everything except the matter in hand. There was no one present at dinner other than members of the family who had come to Washington to hear the address, and no one touched upon the coming speech.

"When we returned from the Capitol the President, Mrs. Wilson, Margaret and I foregathered in the Oval Room and talked it over as families are prone to do after some eventful occasion. I handed the President a clipping from 'Current Opinion' giving the foreign estimate of him. He read this aloud and we discussed the article. I thought the President had taken a position as to policies which no other statesman had yet assumed. He seemed surprised to hear me say this, and thought Webster, Lincoln and Gladstone had announced the same principles. I differed from him. It seemed to me that he did not have a true conception of the path he was blazing. Of the modern statesmen, Mazzini is the one who had a similar outlook, but no other, as far as I know. . . . I could see the President was relieved that the tension was over and the die cast. I knew this would happen."

Right More Precious Than Peace.

Eighteen months before Col. House had written him, Nov. 10, 1915: "We must throw the influence of this nation in behalf of a plan by which international obligations must be kept and in behalf of some plan by which the peace of the world can be maintained."

Wilson accepted the role and undertook the task—a far heavier and more complex task than that of defeating Germany on the field of battle.

"It is a fearful thing," he said, "to lead this great peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance. But the right is more precious than peace and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free. To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured. God helping her, she can do no other."

THE END.

NEW SCOUT PATROL SYSTEM IN EFFECT

Each Group Converted Into Miniature Troop With an Adult Leader.

A new system to overcome the difficulty usually experienced in getting Boy Scout patrols to function properly as co-operating units was put into practice last week by Troop 38 of the Bryan Mullanphy School. It consists of making each patrol virtually a miniature troop in itself, with an adult leader and a Patrol Committee selected from the troop's Fathers' Club. Every patrol has at its head an assistant Scoutmaster, who has full charge of all its activities. One member of the Fathers' Club stands sponsor for it, and picks other members for his committee. Each group has its own activities, but all work together for the advancement of the troop.

To assure the greatest possible harmony, the old patrols were dissolved, and the boys left to form new ones, and elect leaders, as they wished. The Scoutmaster, C. S. Rubey, believes that the resulting natural associations will have a better spirit than is called forth when the officers divide the scouts according to age, rank or chance. The patrols are given certain objectives to reach, including 100 per cent registration and attendance, a minimum number of tests to pass monthly, and the obtaining and wearing of uniforms by all scouts. Each patrol is to do four good turns yearly for the troop, which in turn is pledged to perform four outstanding good turns for the community.

The adoption of this system is made easier because of the active Fathers' Club and because Troop 38 has six assistant scoutmasters, five of whom were developed from former scouts of the troop. All of them have merit badges, and two are eagles, the highest possible rank in scouting. The fathers, who have shown their interest in the boys by buying and equipping a troop cabin, conducting entertainments and hikes, and assisting financially, have volunteered their services, to be utilized in any way the scoutmaster and troop officers see fit.

Headquarters.

Two scouts from each of 13 troops last week distributed bundles of literature for the Church Federation to every Protestant church in St. Louis. The boys used bicycles and accomplished the work in a short time.

The Scout Harmonica Band, under Prof. Hahnel, assisted by singers from Troop 28, gave a recital at the Food Show last night.

Merit Badge Scout Albert Wilson of Troop 77 won the gold-plated harmonica given by the Hohner Harmonica Co. to the first scout to pass the music merit badge, using this instrument. Scout Wilson has been a member of the Scout Harmonica Band since it was organized.

Suburban District.

The Overland Lions' Club invited the scoutmaster and two scouts of Troop 1, Overland, to a club dinner last week. Jack Dixon and Herbert Miller represented the troop, demonstrating first aid, uses of the scout rope, and the importance of the scout laws. This troop delivered the last three issues of the telephone directory in their district, earning enough money to equip themselves with a flag, camera, ten pup tents and other camping materials.

The Scout Club of Kirkwood, led by Scoutmaster P. R. Pray of Troop 4, Kirkwood, met Tuesday noon, the boys cooking their lunches in the woods. Several passed the second-class cooking test, and others demonstrated the methods of building fires and improvising cooking utensils.

The new scoutmaster, Al F. Williams, and Assistant Scoutmaster Al Owings of Troop 3, Kirkwood, have completed a troop program up until July 4, inter-patrol contests being featured. The winning patrol will be given a prize by the Troop Committee. Francis Kelly is Senior Patrol Leader. The patrol leaders and their patrols are: Glennon Baehm, Hawk; Edward Downing, Stag; Junior Aracy, Tiger, and Jack Tracy, Eagle Patrol.

Troop 3, Webster Groves, registered for its tenth year last Friday, and in celebration will hold a parents' night next Thursday. Each patrol will demonstrate some phase of scouting, the whole being dramatized. The Eagle patrol, under George Harris, won the water-boiling event last Thursday, and are now leading in the inter-patrol contest with 238 points. This troop was organized in March, 1916, at the Hagerty Memorial Methodist Church, and has continued to meet there. It averaged a new scoutmaster a year until three years ago, when the present lear, Nat S. Smith, took charge. Since then it has advanced until now there are more Life, Star and Merit badge scouts than at any previous time in its history. The two assistant scoutmasters, Hervey Roberts and Perry Pettingill, are former scouts of the troop.

Troop 9, Webster Groves, elected the following officers Thursday: Senior Patrol Leader, Alan Caldwell; patrol leaders, Richard White, Jack Brackbill, Uilliam Wolf and Ted Dentzer. The troop was served with refreshments by the Parents' Circle, which meets with them the first Thursday of each month for a social hour. Mrs. Flesh, Mrs. Power, Mrs. Hanson and Mrs. Wood acted as hostesses.

West District.

Ernest N. Birge gave an illustrated talk on Stars, and Deputy Commissioner Aubrey C. Lindsley of the West District demonstrated methods of fire-building and wood cutting at a meeting of the Diamond W troop last Monday night. Scoutmaster G. C. Hall, the oldest scoutmaster in the city, opened the exercises with the Flag ceremony used by his troop. About 60 men were present at the meeting, which was held at the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Union boulevard and Kensington avenue.

Troop 17 has reorganized with the following officers: Senior patrol leader, Clarence Todd Jr.; scribe and treasurer, Warren Flynn; patrol leaders, Charles Smith, Burt Ruler, William Dick and A. B. Crowe. Fleming Austin has charge of the bugle corps and Lindsay Austin is leader of the drum corps. Plans for hikes have been made.

Troop 35, of the Cabanne Methodist Church, is celebrating the arrival of its 10-year troop charter. After having several different scoutmasters, the troop was reorganized in 1919 by Charles Minten, then a local deputy commissioner, who secured Charles G. Duggan for a scoutmaster and Fielding Chandler for assistant. About a year ago Duggan resigned and Chandler assumed charge. The troop has always been active and has won many streamers for its flag. It is the only troop in the city to have a permanent assignments of seats to usher at the Municipal Opera and Fashion Show for three years in succession. Over 50 per cent of the troop registration is composed of associate scouts scattered about the country at college or at work; most of these are five-year or more veteran scouts. The present assistant scoutmaster, Elmer B. Kinsey, graduated from the troop ranks, and the majority of the Troop Committee have served for five years or longer.

A new patrol, the Black Bear, was formed a week ago Friday at a meeting of Troop 199. Fred Shopflin is patrol leader. There are two other patrols, the Flying Eagle, under Ted Marlburg, and the Stag, under Robert Buck. Star Scout Donald Smith was appointed senior patrol leader and Star Scout Fred Eldredge bugler. This troop was formed in October, 1924, with 12 scouts, all of whom are still members. It now has 24 boys, six of whom are first-class scouts.

Troop 59 spent virtually the entire day last Sunday assisting in the dedication of the Eden-Immanuel Evangelical Church, participating in the services, acting as ushers and taking part in the brotherhood parade. The membership of this troop has grown so large that it has been divided into two platoons.

Troop 71 has elected the following officers for the coming year: Junior assistant scoutmasters, Bob Davis and William Addison; senior patrol leader, James King; scribe, Carroll Voigt; treasurer, Clarence Fryer; quartermaster, William Fry; patrol leaders, Malcolm Jones, Tom Woods, Middleton Mitchell and Travis Mason.

North District.

Scoutmaster Harry H. Kittle, leader of Troop 40 for the last three years, has resigned. His place will be taken by Arnold Tucker, who moved here recently from the East.

Scout Headquarters extended their sympathy to the family of F. W. St. John, who died recently. Mr. St. John was an active Troop Committeeman of Troop 1 for the last three years.

A reorganization of the Mothers' Club of Troop 222 was effected at a meeting last Tuesday. Thirty mothers were present, in addition to the Troop Committee, the Sunday School superintendent, and many fathers. Demonstrations of first aid and Morse and Semaphore signaling were given by the scouts. A special feature was the presenting of different colored ribbons to the mothers, designating the rank in Scouting her son had attained. The ribbons were: White for Tenderfoot, red for Second Class, blue for First Class, white and red for Merit Badge Scout, white and blue for Star, red and blue for Life, and red, white and blue for Eagle Scout. A green ribbon was added for noncommissioned officers, and a white and purple for commissioned officers.

South District.

Troop 4 introduced a visualized signaling at its meeting last Tuesday, the majority of the scouts learning the Morse code in less than 20 minutes. The registrations of two former scouts, two transferred scouts, and one raw recruit were received at the meeting. An intre-patrol contest, to terminate in May, was started, and plans were made for a "Stunt Night," April 6.

Troop 63, at the Oak Hill Presbyterian Church, Oak Hill and Connecticut avenues, will hold its Annual Scout Services this evening at 8 o'clock. Scouts will have complete charge of the services. The Rev. Mr. Record will give a special Scout sermon, and Eagle Scout David Murphy will speak on "Gee! It's Great to Be a Scout." All scouts and friends of scouting are invited to attend.

Eagle Scout Earl O'Rourke of Troop 76 broke his arm and shoulder while high-jumping at school last Monday. He was in the hospital for several days, but is now at home.

The meeting night of Troop 100 has been changed from Thursday to Wednesday. Last Wednesday the Peabody School held an open session for parents, during which the troops staged a model meeting.

Troop 117 held its first meeting Friday night in its new headquarters at the Pestalozzi School. They formerly met at the Soulard Library.

Each patrol of Troop 155 demonstrated some feature of scouting at their meeting March 5. The first patrol pitched a tent, the second dramatized the Scout Laws, the third showed blanket carries, and the fourth demonstrated the different uses of the Scout neckerchief.

Troop 157 of the Advent Lutheran Church held an investiture ceremony last Tuesday, at which the scouts were given their pins and registration cards. Three applications to join were received. The Troop Committee provided refreshments.

Troop 160 performed a good turn at its last meeting. An automobile passing the meeting place struck a dog, breaking its leg. The scouts took care of the dog's injuries and then called a representative of the Humane Society, who took charge of the animal.

Field Executive M. D. Shippey presented Troop 245 with a troop charter at a special meeting last Tuesday evening, Troop Committee Chairman George Karr receiving it. Both made short talks. As a feature, scouts of Troop 89 demonstrated scout activities. Last Sunday afternoon Troop 245 took a two-mile hike to Francis Park, passing tests in tracking, signaling and fire-building. This troop was organized during the Roundup, under Scoutmaster A. G. Evers.

Troop 1, Mehlville, is building a log cabin on its camp site, about seven miles from Mehlville, on the Lemay Ferry road. Assistant Scoutmaster Chester Eichman has been working on merit badges all winter, and now has 21. At the last meeting of the troop two boys passed their second-class tests. Seven scouts and the scoutmaster are planning to attend Camp Irondale this summer.

Troop 200 put on a number of scouting demonstrations last night at the National Food Show at the Coliseum. The demonstrations consisted of first aid and carries, different kinds of fire-building methods used in camping, as well as different types of signaling, including ardois and heliograph. Several kinds of knots were tied, tagged and thrown down into the audience. A large map was also constructed from field notes gathered on a recent hike. Handicraft and model construction was put on by the scouts, featuring sculpturing, woodcraft, leather work, basketry and metal work. A number of models of pioneering were on display. The closing event was a demonstration of the evolution of the American flag, which was depicted by stages.

EAST ST. LOUIS SCOUT CIRCUS APRIL 10; 700 TO TAKE PART

First Event of Kind in City to Be Held at Masonic Temple.

Definite plans for East St. Louis' first Scout circus, to be given at the Ainad Masonic Temple April 10, have been completed. Approximately 700 scouts are to take part in the exhibition, which will be similar to that held recently in St. Louis, although upon a smaller scale.

It will open with the administering of the Scout oath to the new members recruited during a roundup started the first of last month. Already there are 300 of these. Following the oath are to be demonstrations of bridge-building, making fire by friction, signaling, first aid, and other Scout activities. Two features will be a harmonica band with 150 players, and a Scout band of 32 pieces.

Scouting in East St. Louis was begun in 1919, but made little progress, chiefly because of financial difficulties, until last December. At this time a new executive council was formed, and the organization became a member of the Community Fund. Since then the number of troops has increased from 17 to 30, four of them being Negro, and the Scout membership has risen from 400 to 700. A scoutmasters' training school has been started, and a camp at Waterloo obtained. Special efforts are now being directed toward organizing troops in the tenement districts.

NEWS OF GIRL SCOUT TROOPS

Miss Oleda Schrottky, national director of pageants of the Girl Scouts, will speak at a campers' reunion banquet at the Y. W. C. A., Fourteenth and Locust streets, next Saturday. As March is International Month for the Girl Scouts, the flags of the forty-nine countries having this organization will be used as decorations. Songs and stunts will be given, and the girls who earned honors at camp last summer will receive special awards. After the banquet the girls will hold a rehearsal for the pageant, under the direction of Miss Schrottky. Scout leaders especially are invited to attend and troops having flags have been requested to display them.

The Girl Scout Leaders' Association will meet tomorrow evening at 7:30 at the St. John's Methodist Church, Gingshighway and Washington boulevards. Miss Schrottky will speak, and Miss Margaret Abbott, chairman of the costumes committee for the Pageant, will show drawings of the various costumes to be used.

Sixteen girls who are standing highest in the Girl Scout cooking class conducted by the Laclede Gas Co. had a booth at the Food Show last night. Cookies cut in the shape of the Girl Scout emblem were given away.

The members of Troop 2, Kirkwood, voted to invite Troop 1, Kirkwood, to form a Senior Patrol of Troop 2, at a special meeting a week ago Friday. Ann Bernard was elected scribe. Patrol Leader Kathrine Plummer of the Eagle Patrol is sick.

A new troop, meeting Monday evenings, is being formed at Our Lady of Sorrows school, 5817 South Kingshighway. Miss Isabel Eckleman is captain.

At their last meeting the Katydids of Ferguson dramatized the history of the flag, each patrol showing a different event. The girls are practising their parts for the pageant every Monday in the high school gymnasium.

Field Captain Mary Clark visited troop 7 a week ago Friday, passing some of the girls in the Constellation and the Compass tests. The troop then took an observation hike, the scouts later writing a report of what they had seen. Henrietta Sullivan, Esther Smith, Mildred Kraus, Junia Fulstone and Lillian Cales were presented with their Tenderfoot pins, and a new member, Josephine Woracek, joined the troop. The Silver Fox patrol held a special meeting last Tuesday at the home of Harriet Zimmerman, the girls passing nature tests.

The girls of the Sunflower troop are making window shades for the room in which they meet. The shades will be decorated with embroidered sunflowers and the words "Girl Scouts." They are also practising a dance for the Pageant.

Troop 26 practised pyramid-building last Tuesday, and rehearsed a play to be given at the Pageant. They also planned a five-mile hike from Baden to the Chain of Rocks, for today. The girls intend to pass tests in cooking and map-making.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83
Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"
Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.
Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach
Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.
Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

SOCIETY NEWS SECTION

PART EIGHT. ST. LOUIS, SUNDAY MORNING, MARCH 14, 1926. PAGES 1—18

Dartmouth Club To Give Concert Here on April 7

Entertainment at Hotel Chase Will Usher in "Little Social Season"—Tea Dance and Luncheon.

THE Dartmouth Musical Clubs, now making their annual spring concert tour, have included St. Louis in their itinerary, and will appear the evening of April 7 in the palm room of Hotel Chase. The entertainment comes as a timely herald of the "Little social season," which is ushered in immediately after Easter and continues until the summer exodus. It will give the deutantes, whose social activities have been curtailed by Lent another big party before becoming "second year" girls, and a climax to the spring vacations of the college set.

The musical clubs consist of the traditional college glee club and instrumental club, and a jazz orchestra known as the Barbary Coast, which is well-known in the East. The orchestra played at the last two Harvard-Dartmouth football games and for the past few summers has acquired an enviable record for dance music on ocean liners between New York and Europe.

The personnel of the clubs included Del Worthington, '26, leader of the Glee Club, who managed the championship Dartmouth football team last fall; Oliver Barker '26, captain of the track team; H. T. Marshall and C. R. Starrett, both football stars who have merited unusual scholastic honors.

Although there are no St. Louis men traveling with the clubs this year, the local Dartmouth men are are planning a luncheon and tea dance, the guest lists to include the buds and college girls. These young women have been invited to serve as ushers at the concert and will remain as guests for the dance immediately following.

A list of patronesses who will sponsor the concert and the debutantes invited will be announced later.

A GROUP of women will sponsor a meeting in the interest of the Humane Society at Hotel Statler Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, at which George Arliss, who appears here this week in "Old English," will be the principal speaker. Daughter of Old St. Louis Makes Debut in Toronto Charming Ball Marks Debut of Virginia Gundy, Descendant of Pioneers of This City.

AN INTERESTING bit of early St. Louis history is recalled by news from Toronto, Ontario, of a charming debutante ball given at the King Edward Hotel recently at which Miss Virginia Gundy made her bow. Miss Gundy is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Gundy of Toronto. Her mother was formerly Miss Mimi Berthold, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sarpy Berthold of St. Louis, whose wedding to Mr. Gundy, the son of a Toronto minister who moved North from Philadelphia, took place in the old Berthold home on Washington avenue. Mrs. Gundy's grandmother, one of the grand dames of St. Louis—Madame Armand B. Peugnet, daughter of Jean Sarpy and Adele Cabanne; was the great granddaughter of Pierre Laclede and a granddaughter of Jean Pierre Cabanne, who came from Pau, France, in 1790, whose chateau still stands there. She was born on July 4 in the old Cabanne Mansion, which was the first brick farmhouse built west of the Mississippi River and on the present site of Forest Park.

Charles Gratiot, born in Lausanne, Switzerland, was the great great grandfather of John Sarpy Berthold. He went to Montreal, Canada, in 1752, and lived there for five years with an uncle. In 1777 he came to St. Louis and became a judge. Here, in 1781, he married Victorie, daughter of Madame Chouteau.

The ballroom of the King Edward was arranged as a huge drawing room to accommodate 350 guests. Lace-like draperies of Southern smilax decked the walls and balcony, and great standards of mauve and yellow chrysanthemums against the delicate green of California ferns were grouped about the floor and orchestra. At the entrance to the room the debutante's lovely flowers were massed in a rainbow of color that matched the dancers' varied-hued frocks. Mrs. Gundy's gown was a Paris model of wild rose georgette, embroidered in gold and crystal, and banded with velvet. Her bouquet was of orchids from mauve to white and gold. Miss Virginia Gundy wore a simple frock of white georgette flared over white kitten's ear crepe. She carried pink roses. Supper was served in the Pompeian Room at tables decorated with pink roses and favors. Small blossoms and fruits with burrs affixed were tossed in carnival fashion by the guests.

Miss Mary Alice Kelsey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio N. Kelsey of Montclair, N. J., and Wallace Herndon Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jay Herndon Smith, of 6500 Ellenwood avenue, will be married Saturday afternoon, April 10, at 4:30 o'clock at the home of the bride.

Miss Kelsey has chosen her sister, Miss Burnette Kelsey, as maid of honor, and for bridesmaids two other sisters, Misses Virginia and Millicent Kelsey, a sister of Mr. Smith, Miss Katherine Smith, Miss Eleanor Simmons of St. Louis, Misses Marion Dominick Smith and Helen Dominick Smith of Princeton and Miss Helen Silkman of New York. Mr. Smith will have as his best man his brother, Robert Brookings Smith. A contingent of St. Louisans will go East for the ceremony.

Notes About Missourians In the Capital

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 13.

WASHINGTON society has one paramount subject under discussion these Lenten days, and that is the visit to the national capital in September of King Alfonso and Queen Victoria of Spain.

The Spanish rulers will come to the United States as part of their tour of the Western Hemisphere, which will include South as well as North America. The Ambassador of Spain, Senor Riano, has gone to Madrid to discuss the details of the trip with their majesties. Immediately on arrival in American waters, the King and Queen will go to Swampscott, Mass., to the summer White House, to pay their respects to President and Mrs. Coolidge.

They then will come to Washington, where they will be guests at a brilliant reception given by the Spanish embassy and a number of other official functions. An official of the Department of State will be detailed as their escort while in this country.

The first of the series of White House musicales was given by President and Mrs. Coolidge on Thursday, when the Flonzaley Quartet entertained a group of official and diplomatic guests. On account of the serious news from Plymouth, Vt., about the condition of Col. John Coolidge, father of the President, no date for the May White House musicale has been set. President and Mrs. Coolidge are holding themselves in readiness to leave for his bedside. John Coolidge, son of the President and Mrs. Coolidge, will come to Washington the latter part of next week to spend part of his Easter holidays. As a member of the Amherst Glee Club, part of this vacation will be spent on tour.

Secretary and Mrs. Dwight F. Davis were the guests in whose honor the military attache of the Japanese embassy, Col. Noburu Morita, entertained Thursday, at the New Willard Hotel. Sixty guests were invited to meet the popular Cabinet officer and his wife. The Japanese Ambassador could not attend because of illness.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the late President, was the guest of honor Wednesday at the weekly luncheon of the Woman's National Democratic Club, of which she is honorary president. Mrs. Emily Newell Blair was among the other guests, which included Mrs. James A. Reed, wife of Senator Reed of Missouri, and many other official Democratic women.

Mrs. George Williams, wife of Senator Williams of Missouri, entertained at a luncheon of 22 guests Friday at the Mayflower Hotel in honor of her house guest, Mrs. Oscar Johnson of St. Louis, who has been in Washington for a week. Yesterday, Mrs. Johnson left for her home.

Miss Beatrice Henderson, granddaughter of Mrs. John B. Henderson, was among the group of debutantes who attended the luncheon of 100 given on Tuesday by Mrs. Charles G. Matthews in honor of Miss Helen Gary.

The Kansas and Missouri delegations in Congress were the guests on Wednesday at a luncheon in the Grace Dodge Hotel in honor of the Kansas University Glee Club.

Mrs. Robert Talbot, who has been the house guest of Representative and Mrs. Samuel C. Major of Missouri, left Washington yesterday for Charleston, S. C., where she will join her son, Capt. Ethelbert Talbot, at the Navy Yard there.

Mrs. Dwight F. Davis, who has been in Hot Springs, Va., for a week, came to Washington for the Japanese dinner, but returned there yesterday for the rest of March. Her son, Dwight F. Davis Jr., is staying with her.

Mrs. Walter M. Crunden of the La Due road has returned from Colorado Springs, Colo.

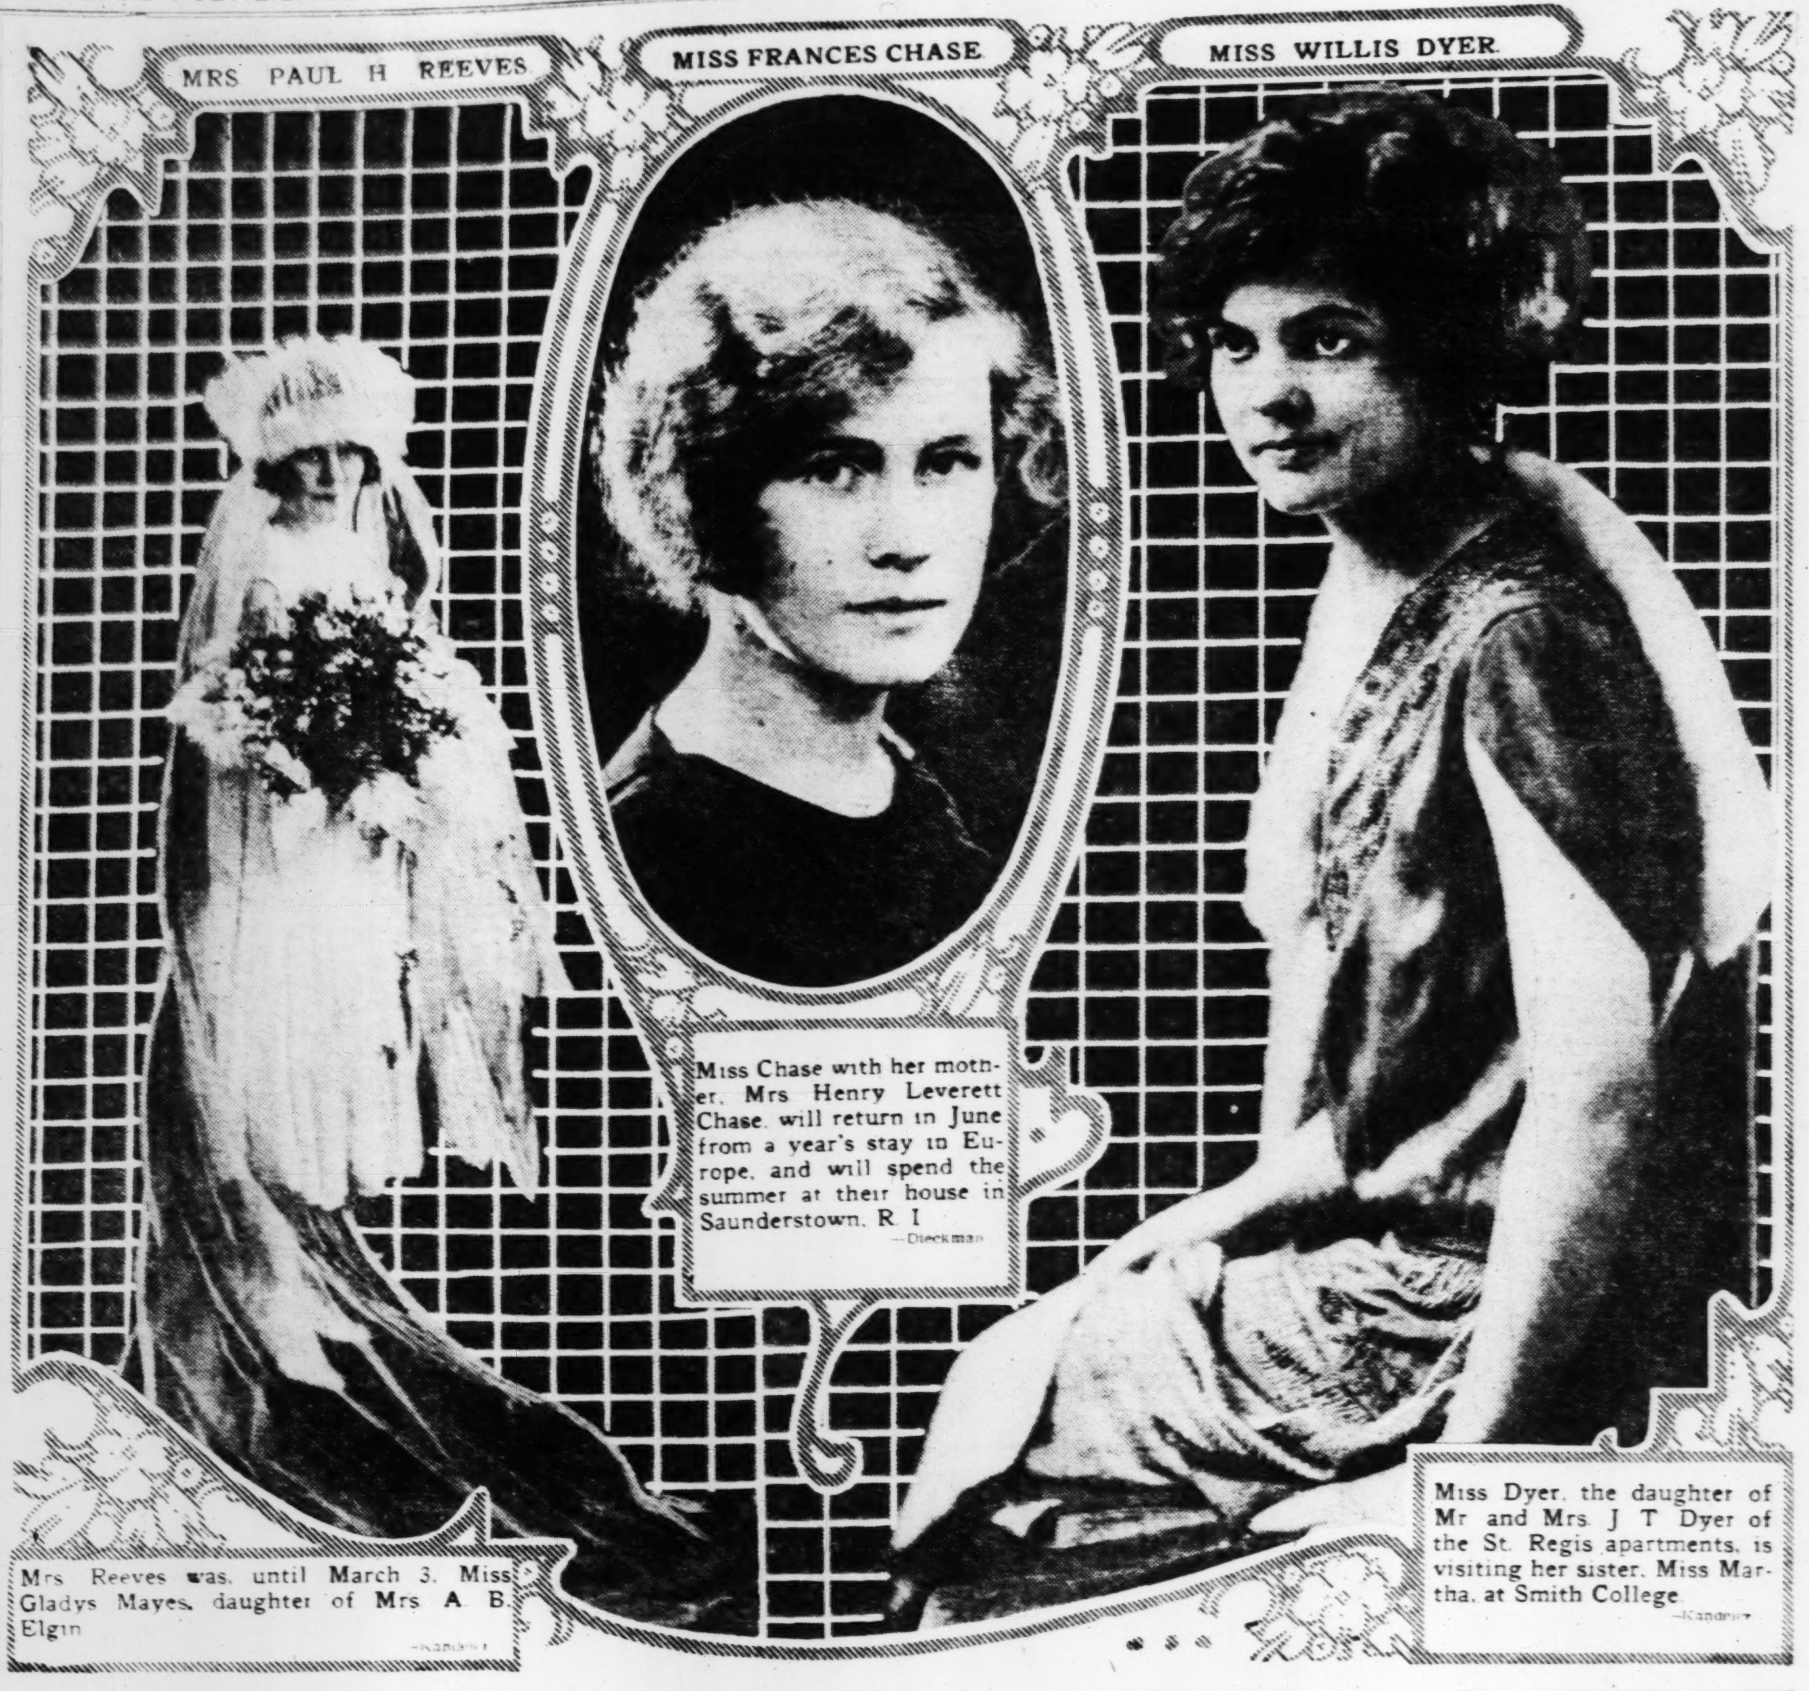
Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Bates of 4235 Westminster place are home from Ormond, Fla., where they have been since Jan. 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Crunden of 4426 Westminster place will leave St. Louis tomorrow for New York to join their daughter, Miss Catherine Louise Crunden, who has just returned from Bermuda with Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Edmunds and a party of friends. They will all go to Hot Springs, Va., for Easter.

Mr. and Mrs. August A. Busch of Grant's Farm, their daughter, Mrs. Louis Hager Jr., and Jacqueline Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Drummond Jones, have returned from Pasadena, Cal., where they visited Mrs. Adolphus Busch at her winter home. Mr. and Mrs. Hager will reside on Gran't Farm until the completion of their own home.

Miss Elizabeth Douglass, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Douglass of 16 Vandeventer place, and Miss Anne Wallace, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brookings Wallace of Pershing avenue, will depart the latter part of April to be members of a house party given by one of the fraternities at Princeton University. Miss Douglass will go on to New York and Philadelphia for a fortnight.

Mrs. H. M. Blank of 4361 West Pine boulevard will depart today for a month's stay in the East. She will attend a house party in Cleveland before boing to Boston to visit her daughter, Miss Dorothy, who attends the Mount Ida School for Girls. Mrs. Blank and her daughter will spend the Easter season in Atlantic City and New York.



Mrs Reeves was, until March 3, Miss Gladys Mayes, daughter of Mrs A B Elgin —Kandeer

Play for Benefit of Choral Club Fund

THE ST. LOUIS MORNING CHORAL CLUB will give a French play for the benefit of the club scholarship fund at the Wednesday Club, Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The play, "Tout Ensemble," has been rewritten and rearranged by Paul Berdanier and promises to be most attractive. The first part, "Soupcon," will be presented with a picturesque Louis XVI setting and costumes of the fourteenth and seventeenth centuries. The second part of the play, "Soup Songs," is a clever burlesque on the opening scenes and was written by Mrs. Daniel Ruebel. The production is under the direction of Mrs. Bessie Bown Ricker and Mrs. William Reeder.

Mrs. Cherry Art Juror

MRS. Kathryn E. Cherry has been selected from the St. Louis artists to serve as a member of the jury of award at the Hoosier Salon at Marshall Field & Co.'s Galleries in Chicago, which opened March 5 and will run to March 20. Natives of that state, and those affiliated with Indiana artists for any period of five years are eligible, and the group of exhibitors includes Victor Higgins, Wayman Adams and Janet Scuddor.

Mrs. Louis Nowak of Detroit, Mich., who has been the guest of Mrs. J. Nicholous Schroeder of 3500 Juniata avenue, has returned to her home. Mrs. Nowak was the guest of honor at a number of parties during her visit in St. Louis.

The regata events will be supervised by C. F. Chapman, editor of Motor Boating. Gar Wood and Webb Jay are among the entrants.

Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, is expected to visit his brother, W. L. Mellon of Pittsburg, who recently arrived at the Roney Plaza Hotel. Palm Beach Season Lengthened This Year.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

PALM BEACH, Fla., March 13.—This year, while the great hotels and clubs which have sprung up since last year are most noticeable, a new feature at Palm Beach is the lengthening of the season. The tennis tournaments which formerly occurred in February were set forward two weeks this season, bringing the close of the men's tournament in mid-March.

The weeks of the men's and women's tennis tournaments always mark the pinnacle in Palm Beach society of the smart season. Many number of large dinner dances have been given, and the serious side, too, has been cared for, as March brought three concerts in the Society of Arts, the last lecture of the Current Events class, several concerts and musicales given for various benefits.

The Everglades Club has announced that it will remain open well into April, and the jolliest part of the season comes after March 30, when for two weeks boys and girls come on their Easter holidays from their boarding schools and take possession of Palm Beach.

The tennis matches for the Florida championship always attract a large and distinguished gallery, and on the occasion of Miss Elizabeth Ryan's victory the courts were thronged and the bleachers filled with society and members of the visiting English colony.

A brilliant concert by the Society of Arts was held on Monday evening, and on Wednesday afternoon [illegible] Diaz, the Metropolitan Opera star, gave a recital at the home of Mrs. Edward F. Hutton. Another notable concert was given at the new Galleries by the Hon. Sibyl [illegible] of London and Samuel [illegible], a Russian violinist.

Engagements Announced

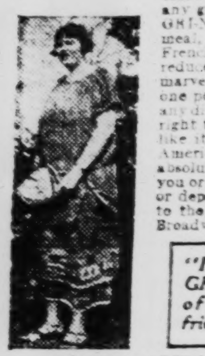
TO TAKE OFF FAT

French Formula Reduces Pleasantly, Safely, Surely

If you are suffering from excess fat, if your heart, lungs and liver are affected by the burden you are carrying; if your joints are stiffened with rheumatism, or if you are a victim of high blood pressure due to obesity, you can now be relieved. No matter how little or how much you want to lose, and no matter all the pills, creams, diets and exercises you have tried before SAN-GRI-NA, a discovery of a French scientist, is guaranteed to relieve any fat man or woman or your money is refunded.

SAN-GRI-NA is the formula of a French physician. It has been used in Europe by millionaires, actresses and hundreds of fat men and women, because it is simple, easy, pleasant and harmless. If you are burdened with rolls of ugly fat, make this test today. First, weigh yourself, then go to any good drug store and get a box of SAN-GRI-NA, take two small tablets before each meal, and watch your fat disappear. One French woman now in America, states that she reduced fifty pounds in eight weeks with this marvelous discovery, and has never regained one pound since. You do not have to follow any diets or exercises, but be sure and get the right tablets called SAN-GRI-NA, as nothing like it has ever before been offered to the American public. SAN-GRI-NA is guaranteed absolutely harmless, and positive to reduce you or money refunded. Sold at all good drug or department stores or you can send direct to the Scientific Research Laboratories, 1841 Broadway, New York City.



"I lost 56 pounds with SAN-GRI-NA," says Miss Unkirch of Philadelphia. "My own friends do not recognize me."

CONSTANT WAVING AND CURLING LIKELY TO RUIN THE HAIR

Girls just must curl and wave bobbed hair to appear their prettiest. But constant curling and waving burn and dry the luster, vitality and very life from the hair.

To offset these bad effects, just get a 35-cent bottle of delightful refreshing "Danderine" at any drug store or toilet counter and just see for yourself how quickly it revives dry, brittle, lifeless and fading hair.

"Danderine" is a dependable tonic and will do wonders for any girl's hair. It nourishes, stimulates and strengthens each single hair, bringing back that youthful gleam, glint and vigorous luxuriance. Falling hair stops and dandruff disappears. "Danderine" is pleasant and easy to use.

Attention

Is the First Consideration in Choosing New Glasses

The proper correction of defective eyesight is possible only through the services of a reliable Optometrist to scientifically examine your eyes, and to carefully fit and adjust the frames and mountings. Any service not combining these essentials is not only worthless, but will cause impaired eyesight.

Our optical service includes the attention of an optometrist skilled in examining and prescribing for each individual case the particular correction required. And, always, prices are moderate, commensurate with the service rendered.

WOMEN URGE ACTION ON ZONING MEASURE

Voters' League Bulletin Says Ordinance Is Being "Heard to Death."

The St. Louis League of Women Voters, in the current issue of the League's weekly "Bulletin," which will be distributed among members tomorrow, suggests editorially that the proposed zoning ordinance is being "heard to death" by prolonged public hearings, and urges that the membership write individually to their Aldermen demanding that action be taken on the ordinance "without further delay."

The ordinance has been before the Legislative Committee of the Board of Aldermen since Dec. 11, 1925, the "Bulletin" recalls, and three public hearings have been held. The present session of the Board will terminate April 9, it is pointed out, and, therefore, if action is to be had, it must be immediate.

Lineup Called Clear.

"But it is reported that there will be more 'hearings'," says the publication. "We have no means of knowing the purpose of additional hearings.

"It would seem to us that the subject had been thoroughly thrashed out. The lineup is clear. Certain interests prefer speculative profit to the city's welfare. The profit by rent increases land values at the expense of destroying home areas. The corresponding losses in land values in sections devastated by undesirable intrusions fall mostly on individual home owners and are therefore of no concern to the speculators. Nor do they appear to be any more sensitive to eye-sores of two sorts: Business buildings despoiling residential areas, and handsome residential areas desolated and running to ruin.

"We are mindful that a frequent means of opposing legislation is to prolong 'hearings' until too late for action. Is the Zoning Ordinance being heard to death?"

Newspaper Man to Speak.

The League's Primary School of Foreign Affairs will be addressed at Hotel Chase Tuesday at 3:45 p. m., by Clark McAdams of the editorial staff of the Post-Dispatch and instructor of journalism at Washington University. His subject will be, "Responsible Habits in Reading the News."

The program of meetings for the coming week includes: Public Schools Committee, at League headquarters, 3622 Olive street, tomorrow at 2 p. m.; meeting of ward organization presidents at 3 p. m., at the home of Mrs. George Levis, 4457 McPherson avenue, chairman of the Get-Out-the-Vote Committee at the school tax election March 23; Convention Committee luncheon at Hotel Statler at 12:30 p. m., Thursday, at which Mrs. Paul Rittenhouse of Chicago, secretary of the national convention to be held in St. Louis, will be the guest of honor; and Friday evening, the regular Economics Class for working girls in the club room of the Public Library.

Lasar is chairman of the Entertainment Committee and will preside. Mrs. Fred Armstrong is chairman of the Press Committee.

The Tuesday Literary Club will meet Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. at the Artists' Guild. Mrs. G. R. Webb will have charge of the program. "Current Topics," including the Noble prizes in literature, will be given by Miss Ida Lubke.

The regular meeting of the Matthew Fontaine Maury Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, Mrs. J. P. Higgins, president, was held Thursday, March 4, at the home of Mrs. E. A. Skillern, 14 South court. The hostesses for the day were Mrs. E. A. Skillern, Mrs. R. S. Mitchell, Mrs. H. H. Perkins, Mrs. W. C. Bonnell and Mrs. C. E. Hipolite.

The regular meeting of the Mothers and Teachers' Circle of the Bates School will be held Thursday at 3 p. m., in the kindergarten of the school. New business will be discussed and election of officers for the ensuing year will take place.

After six months of strenuous welfare work, the Glendale Community Club, M. F. W. C., will lay aside its sewing and enjoy a day of recreation. On Wednesday, at the Community House, in Glendale, the members and friends of the club will celebrate in honor of St. Patrick.

Mmes. T. Voorhees, A. Wacher and Carl V. Hansen are the committee on entertainment and hospitality.

Members are requested to notify Mrs. A. Wacher of their acceptance of the invitation and the number of guests each will have. Favors and prizes will carry out the club colors, green and white, as well as those of St. Patrick's.

Sales Women

Garland's have originated a plan that opens the way for every woman and miss to know the pride of possession of a fashionable Fur Coat and to have it for wear next winter without the burden of paying for it at that time.

You simply open your membership in the Fur Coat Club with as small a sum as $1 and then deposit a fixed amount at stated intervals, pay day, the day the allowance is received or whatever time is most convenient. How About the Wife?

WEBER MOTOR CAR CO.

Isn't she entitled to a little consideration?

We men are occasionally careless about appearances, but the women—never.

If your wife doesn't complain about the shabby appearance of the old car you're driving, it's because she thinks you can't afford a new one, and she's too much of a sport to complain about it.

But how about you? Have you told her about Weber-Pledged Used Cars—the cars with a guarantee? Have you explained to her about the thousands of unused miles—the mechanical perfection—the perfect paint job?

Have you told her that a Weber-Used Car is a better buy than a cheap new car?

Does She know how low our prices are?

As for convenient terms, we'll take care of that.

Give the wife an even break!

RENEWED OR JUST PAINTED

The purchase of a used car has long been regarded as a risk, principally because good automobiles have been abused in use and in the manner of their resale.

Unscrupulous operators have tried to beguile buyers by covering derelicts with a shimmering coat of new paint.

Motor knocks, wheels out of alignment and other defects are not discussed or hurriedly passed over by the suave salesman.

But our Used Car Department has always been operated by sound honest merchandising methods.

Where cars taken in trade on new Buicks need complete overhauling jobs, they are given them, not by others, but in our own shop, directly under our own supervision.

When refinishing is advisable, such is given, not on a price basis, but on quality of materials and workmanship only.

Our sole purpose is to sell clean, dependable cars. Renewed in every sense, so that buyers of West Side Buick cars are assured trouble-free transportation at a lower possible cost, guaranteed to be free from the petty annoyances and disappointments usually associated with ownership of used cars.

Below we list a few of the several we now have on hand, all can be purchased on the new G. M. A. C. terms, which makes their purchase easy. Remember ours are

BUILDING SHOWS BIG SLOW-UP IN NATIONAL SURVEY

S. W. Straus & Co. Report Indicates Unusual Shrinkage in Some 440 Cities Covered in Monthly Figures.

ST. LOUIS TOTAL ONE THAT DROPPED BELOW

Statistics Are for February and Disclose Shrinkage of $20,174,458 Over Same Month in 1925.

Indications of a slow-up in build ng activities covering a very large ection of the United States and eaching unusual proportions in any cities, were revealed in the ational monthly building survey f S. W. Straus & Co. In 440 cities overed in the report there was a oss of 7 per cent as compared ith February, 1925. Building permits issued in these places in Feb uary totaled $270,100,172, compared with $290,274,630 in Febru ry last year; 26 states and the District of Columbia reported osses, while 21 states made gains.

Activities in increased volume ontinued in most parts of the outh, where 89 leading cities howed a gain of 20 per cent. Flor da led the South with a 330 per ent gain. Atlanta reported slight less than $6,000,000 in February ermits, making it the leading uthern city and giving it sixth lace among the cities of the coun y. Large activities were reported leading Texas cities, while sub antial progress is shown in w Orleans, Birmingham, Mem is and Greensboro and Ashe ille, N. C.

St. Louis Among Losers.

In New York City losses were hown in Manhattan, Brooklyn and ueens, which were overcome by a ,000,000 gain in the Bronx, and he Greater City had a net increase f $2,000,000. Losses were shown Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia, os Angeles, Washington, Boston, eveland, Portland, Ore.; Pitts rg, Milwaukee, Oakland, Cal., nd St. Louis, where gains as a le are shown.

Among the Northern and West rn cities reporting increased ac ivities were Newark and Jersey ity, N. J.; San Francisco, Seattle, ndianapolis and Mt. Vernon and onkers, N. Y. The suburban areas f most large cities continue to show healthy increases.

The Straus reports indicate that building activities in the entire country have only made a negligible gain over the first two months of 1925.

Material Market Firmer.

Meanwhile the building material arket has reflected increased mness and the indices of build g costs have either remained sta onary or risen slightly. A decid l decrease in quotations on cer in grades of lumber was reported, hile increases were made in com on brick, due to adverse weather onditions and lack of pulverized nthracite.

Hollow tile and Portland cement rices remained firm and some ight weakness was revealed in the ructural steel market, especially n the Mid-West district, where ompetition among fabricators was ffective. Linseed oil continues to ecline in New York and Chicago, hile in the general markets of the untry, lime, crushed stone, sand nd wire nails tended to rise.

BUILDING SHOWS BIG SLOW-UP IN NATIONAL SURVEY

S. W. Straus & Co. Report Indicates Unusual Shrinkage in Some 440 Cities Covered in Monthly Figures.

ST. LOUIS TOTAL ONE THAT DROPPED BELOW

Statistics Are for February and Disclose Shrinkage of $20,174,458 Over Same Month in 1925.

Indications of a slow-up in building activities covering a very large section of the United States and reaching unusual proportions in many cities, were revealed in the national monthly building survey of S. W. Straus & Co. In 440 cities covered in the report there was a loss of 7 per cent as compared with February, 1925. Building permits issued in these places in February totaled $270,100,172, compared with $290,274,630 in February last year; 26 states and the District of Columbia reported losses, while 21 states made gains

Activities in increased volume continued in most parts of the South, where 89 leading cities showed a gain of 20 per cent. Florida led the South with a 330 per cent gain. Atlanta reported slightly less than $6,000,000 in February permits, making it the leading southern city and giving it sixth place among the cities of the country. Large activities were reported in leading Texas cities, while substantial progress is shown in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis and Greensboro and Asheville, N. C.

St. Louis Among Losers.

In New York City losses were shown in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Queens, which were overcome by a $6,000,000 gain in the Bronx, and the Greater City had a net increase of $3,000,000. Losses were shown in Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Washington, Boston, Cleveland, Portland, Ore.; Pittsburg, Milwaukee, Oakland, Cal., and St. Louis, where gains as a rule are shown.

Among the Northern and Western cities reporting increased activities were Newark and Jersey City, N. J.; San Francisco, Seattle, Indianapolis and Mt. Vernon and Yonkers, N. Y. The suburban areas of most large cities continue to show healthy increases.

The Straus reports indicate that building activities in the entire country have only made a negligible gain over the first two months of 1925.

Material Market Firmer.

Meanwhile the building material market has reflected increased firmness and the indices of building costs have either remained stationary or risen slightly. A decided decrease in quotations on certain grades of lumber was reported, while increases were made in common brick, due to adverse weather conditions and lack of pulverized anthracite.

Hollow tile and Portland cement prices remained firm and some slight weakness was revealed in the structural steel market, especially in the Mid-West district, where competition among fabricators was effective. Linseed oil continues to decline in New York and Chicago, while in the general markets of the country, lime, crushed stone, sand and wire nails tended to rise.

FEDERER REALTY CO. REPORTS RESALES IN SUBDIVISIONS

The Federer Realty Co. reports an unusually active week in subdivision properties, both in the sale of lots and new buildings started. More than 700 feet have been resold for early buyers of Holly Hills. An aggregate of these resales is close to $60,000. More than 25 new buildings have been started in this subdivision and a larger number is contemplated in the next 30 days.

Sales in Woodland Park aggregate more than 1000 feet, most of which will be immediately improved. The building program in this subdivision has exceeded all expectations, and although on the market only a few months, more than 40 buildings have been started and will be under way in the next 10 days. Although some of the buildings will be flats, brick bungalows will predominate, and sales of some of the uncompleted buildings have already been made.

This subdivision is improved with asphalt streets, water, sewers, gas and electric service.

The company also reports the sale of a block fronting 300 feet on Minnesota avenue between Eiler and Fassen streets for the Gillick Realty Co. to the Missouri Press Brick Co., who are improving with double flats.

T. C. TUPPER HOUSE SUGGESTS NEW ENGLAND FARMHOUSES

A two-story residence has been completed for T. C. Tupper at the corner of Wydown boulevard and University Lane. Sweeping roofs and dormer windows of gray-green slate have been combined simply with walls of whitewashed brick and suggest a modest farmhouse of the type still to be found in rural sections of New England.

This suggestion is emphasized by a walled door yard paved with irregular stones. Here in one of three arches is the door, and in another a pump and a shallow tank for water hyacinths. On the east, outside the living room and dining room windows, a flagged terrace overlooks a small garden. A two-car garage and quarters for servants and a guest occupy the remainder of the first floor. On the second, reached by a small circular staircase with an iron handrail, are four bedrooms and two baths. Ralph Cole Hall and Victor Proetz are the architects.

BUILDING AT MORGAN AND NINETEENTH STREETS SOLD

The Cornet & Zeibig Trust reports the sale of the southwest corner of Morgan and Nineteenth streets, owned by Eliza L. McCabe, to a client. A two-story building which has been vacant for several years is on the ecorner. The new owners will make improvements and occupy the premises soon.

CYTRON FINANCES APARTMENT SALES

Three transactions embracing apartment buildings and aggregating, according to agents' figures, $1,260,000 were financed by the Citron Mortgage Co. during the week.

The largest of these involved the Marworth apartments, two 9-story twin structures, at the northwest corner of Maryland and Taylor avenues, which were acquired by E. Pudivitr, for a reported consideration of $835,000. These buildings were recently erected by E. M. Worthington, who was represented in the transaction by M. H. Rodemyer & Co. The Ebbeler Realty Co. represented the purchaser.

The other two sales involved the Lucerne apartments at the southwest corner of Taylor and McPherson avenues, and the Smith Block, at 6500 Delmar boulevard, which were acquired by the Worth Investment Company. The reported consideration in these two transactions were $200,000 and $225,000, respectively.

The Cytron Mortgage Company underwrote second mortgages on these properties totaling $325,000. As a source of capital for second mortgage loans, the Cytron Mortgage Company has become a factor in real estate operations in St. Louis.

TWO 4-ROOM FLATS SOLD BY MERCANTILE TRUST CO.

The Mercantile Trust Co. reports the sale of a 4-family flat at 5152-54 Minerva avenue and also a 4-family flat at 4044-46 Finney avenue to a client of the Dubinsky Realty Co.

IMPROVEMENTS SOON FOR OSAGE HILLS

Ground to Be Broken This Week—Golf Course Has Been Laid Out.

Ground will be broken this week by Bixby-Smith, Inc., 316 North Eighth street, for improvements costing thousands of dollars at Osage Hills, on the Big Bend road and the Meramec River, looking toward the immediate carrying out of plans and designs prepared by Franz Herding, noted Swiss landscape engineer and city planning expert, which will make of this location an ideal home section, unlike any other St. Louis undertaking.

The Osage Country Club, on 120 acres of this property, in the midst of the Osage Hills district, has already laid out the 18-hole golf course and will begin at once construction work on it and the erection of the country club building, a rambling, modern and commodious structure, with extensive and beautiful grounds. This building will occupy a rise of ground opposite the old Meramec Highlands Inn, which burned recently, and will front on Big Bend road.

A contract was made by Bixby-Smith, Inc., the past week with Frederick Pitzman of Pitzman's Co., engineers and surveyors, to have complete charge of all the engineering and supervising work of the Osage Hills property.

The improvements for the Osage Hills property, covering approximately 400 acres, in addition to the country club, will include the most modern hard-surfaced streets and drives, sidewalks, a complete sewage system, imposing and ornamental gateways, rustic spots, parkways and many touches unusual in residence sections. Both improvements and size of property make this the record home district of St. Louis up to this time.

The opening sale of this property is scheduled for April 4.

TYPEWRITER COMPANY LEASES LOUDERMAN BUILDING SPACE

Isaac T. Cook & Co., Inc., report the leasing of part of the first floor of the new Louderman building at 1100 Locust street to L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Co. of Syracuse, N. The L. C. Smith Co. occupies the third floor of the Central National Bank Building and will move this office, together with the Corona office, to the Louderman Building as soon as the new quarters are completed in April.

The Raigor Art and Music Shop at 1225 Franklin avenue has leased a store in the Carleton Building at 310 North Sixth street, which it will operate in addition to the present store. Part of the second floor of the Pineate Building was leased by the Fink Instrument Co. for a long term of years. The W. P. Erhart Leather Co. has closed a lease for space in the Leather Trades Building at 1600 Locust street. All parties were represented by Isaac T. Cook & Co.

The Lipshitz company is now at 614 North Eleventh street. The officers of the Lipshitz company are M. Lipshitz, president, and H. L. Harris, secretary. Both parties in the transaction were represented by the Mullin-Walters Realty Co.

J. H. Frazee has leased the store room at the southeast corner of Hebert and Parnell streets for a bakery; Frank Sehi has leased the north half of the first floor in the building at 102-04 North Third street; Fred Davidson, at present connected with the Modganford Drug Co., has leased the store room at 2301 Pennsylvania avenue where he will operate a drug store.

Herbert M. Smyth, president of a broom company, has purchased through the company a residence at 2332 Division street.

NEGROES SOON TO OPEN NEW OFFICE BUILDING

Part of People's Finance Corporation Structure Now Ready for Occupancy.

The new $270,000 building of the People's Finance Corporation, a Negro organization, at the southwest corner of Jefferson avenue and Market street, is partly ready for occupancy. More than half of the available office space has been taken by Negro doctors, dentists, lawyers, real estate companies and a music studio.

The new building is one of the most ambitious of its kind ever undertaken by Negroes, being five stories high and having a ground space of 88 by 147 feet. It marks the achievement of a great ideal by the members of the board or directors of the People's Finance Corporation, and stands as a monument at the head of the Jefferson plaza in anticipation of the new Market street boulevard.

Another accomplishment is the fact that the building has been erected within the estimated figures, despite advancing costs of labor and materials.

Notable features of the interior are the lounge and the ballroom which will be on the top floor. A section of the basement will be used for billiard rooms and a recreation hall.

The extreme southwest corner of the building is occupied by the People's Finance Corporation, which will handle the renting and leasing. The first floor also is given over to a barber shop, drug store and a pressing shop.

The second, third and fourth floors of the building will be devoted to offices.

J. C. Cheney, who has served 23 years on the Frisco Railroad, will conduct a cafeteria on the first floor. Cheney was awarded a gold watch for his years of faithful service with the railroad.

The roof has been so constructed as to permit of its use as a roof garden.

The building will be formally dedicated on March 27.

Plans and specifications were drawn by Beverley T. Nelson, a St. Louis architect. The foundations are in and work is going forward on the exterior walls of poured gypsum which possesses the same being used for the first time in this locality in the Sparks residence. It is a special kind of ygpsum which possesses the same fire-resisting and insulating properties as other gypsum products. It is handled in the same manner as Portland cement concrete but because of the rapidity with which it hardens it permits construction to go forward at a rapid pace.

The exterior finish of brick veneer will be applied over the gypsum walls in the same manner as over wood construction, because gypsum can be nailed into as easily as wood. Metal ties will be used to tie the brick into the gypsum concrete walls.

Coolidge Against "Blue Laws."

WASHINGTON, March 13.—President Coolidge apparently is satisfied with the way Sunday is observed in the National Capital and looks with disfavor on blue law proposals to put an end to Sunday sports, dancing and theatrical entertainment. The President goes to church regularly and does not get out much where Government workers and others are seeking Sunday recreation. It was explained at the White House yesterday that he realizes this probably limits his opportunity to see whether the bars here have been let down too far, but so far as he has been able to observe, the public generally is satisfied with present conditions.

89 SOUTHERN CITIES GAIN IN BUILDING

In the 12 Southern states, 89 cities and towns reported a gain of 20 per cent in February building permits, compared with February last year, according to the National monthly building survey of S. W. Straus & Co. The 25 leading cities showed a gain of 35 per cent. Eight of the 12 states, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia, showed increases.

While the total this February for these 12 states, $49,340,630, shows that a large volume of construction will proceed during the coming spring, the percentage of gain indicates a much more stable building program than was evident at this time last year, when prospects in some localities were somewhat inflated.

The entire South stands out well in building activities when compared with the slower conditions in other sections of the country. Atlanta took the lead, held by Houston in January, while Miami, which had been leading for many months past, held second place, with New Orleans third. Atlanta was also sixth city in February among the 25 leading cities of the country.

A comparison of the Southern state totals shows Florida still far in the lead, with a February total of $18,459,660. Texas was second and Georgia third in February.

The 25 Southern cities reporting the largest volume of building permits for February are:

COMMODITY RATE REDUCTION DENIED WESTERN ROADS

For Second Time in Five Years, I. C. C. Rejects Plea for a Cut on the Long Hauls.

ADVERSE RULING IS SECOND IN 5 YEARS

Eastern Lines Would Have Been Deprived of Revenue by Reduction, Opinion Points Out.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Transcontinental railroads failed today for the second time in five years to win Interstate Commerce Commission approval of reduced freight rates on long hauls without applying the cuts to intermediate movements.

The case decided today was that of the Western transcontinental carriers who sought reductions on 47 commodities moving from origin territory west of the Indiana State line to Pacific Coast terminals in an effort to cope with Eastern manufacturers who can ship through the Panama Canal.

By a 7 to 3 vote, with Commissioners Esch, Meyer and Atchison dissenting, the commission held that while the carriers hoped to stimulate traffic through the proposed reductions and increase net revenues, they had not applied the cuts to intermediate destinations because this would "more than offset the gain from increased traffic to the ports."

The case had been pending for three years and involved the long and short haul provision of Section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, which makes it discretionary with the commission to grant relief by permitting lower rates for long than for short hauls. The Gooding bill, pending in the Senate, would wipe out this discretionary power.

Eastern Lines Would Suffer.

The commission held that the reduced rates would have diverted a substantial volume of traffic, principally iron and steel articles, from interior Eastern points to Chicago territory, and would have deprived Eastern lines of the revenue they now derive from the movement of such traffic to Atlantic ports. No estimate of this loss, it said, appeared in the record of the case.

With an all-rail movement from Chicago of 300,000 tons of iron and steel a year and a gain of 50 per cent because of the reduction in rail rates, the commission declared by way of illustration, the Eastern lines would lose the revenue of 150,000 tons.

"If this tonnage should be lost to the Pittsburg district," it asserted, "the Eastern lines would lose in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. At 40 cents per 100 pounds the loss to the water lines would exceed $1,000,000."

Would Also Reduce Traffic.

While the gain to the Western lines would about offset the loss to the Eastern carriers and water lines, the commission added, the Eastern roads would not only "suffer a loss of revenue through a reduction in the water-borne traffic, but the increase in the spread between the all-rail rates from Chicago and from the East would tend to deprive them of a considerable proportion of such traffic as now originates in the East and moves by rail."

The dissenting Commissioners, who set forth their views at length, declared the majority had failed to decide the question whether the proposed cuts, if applied on shorter hauls, would be fully compensatory, or whether the present rates to the intermediate territory are reason or unreasonable.

This, they declared, had "always been considered one of the fundamental questions in cases of this kind."

The principal commodities on which the roads sought reductions were iron and steel, paper and paper products, ammunition, cotton piece goods, lard substitutes, paint, roofing, rosin, soap and soda.

Extensive hearings were held throughout the country, with Midwest interests, excepting the iron and steel industries affiliated with the United States Steel Corporation, generally supporting the reduced rates and Eastern manufacturers and shippers aligned with the opposition. Except for certain lumber, fruit, mining and flour milling interests, these in the inter-mountain territory also withheld their support of the proposed reductions.

Sugar Cargo Afire in Ship's Hold.

By the Associated Press.

BALTIMORE, Md., March 13.—Sugar in the forward hold of the British steamer Tafna, from Port Tarafa, continued to smolder tonight. Fire boats which had followed the craft in from Sandy Point, 25 miles down the Chesapeake, poured water through her hatches as she lay at her dock. Firemen said the inner portions of the cargo might smolder for a day or more.

Gen. Butler and Officer-Host He Had Arrested at Party

By the Associated Press.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., March 13.—Brig-Gen. Smedley D. Butler, who a few days ago startled army and navy service circles by his charges of intoxication against Col. Alexander S. Williams, of the Marine Corps, today had 10 infected teeth extracted at the Navy Hospital here. It was said at the hospital that Gen. Butler was much weakened by the dental work. Meanwhile, official circles were rife with rumors that an effort would be made to stop the court-martial proceedings against Col. Williams.

ZIZI'S STORY OF LIFE AS MORGANATIC WIFE

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 13.—Mme. Jeanne Lambrino, more widely known by her nickname, Zizi, former morganatic wife of Carol, erstwhile Crown Prince of Rumania, although unwilling to discuss her 10,000,000-franc suit against her former husband, has allowed "a girl friend whom she had known since infancy" to give some details of the final episodes of her romance. This account, it is stated, may be accepted as if coming from Zizi herself.

"From the day the marriage was annulled on the ground that a Prince of Rumania could not marry a Rumanian subject, and in order to make it possible for Carol to marry Princess Helen of Greece, the Prince continued to see Zizi," so the story ran. "He assured her that the marriage to Princess Helen would be one of mere form and would change nothing in their lives. As a matter of fact, after the ceremony in 1922 (the wedding to Princess Helen) the relations of Zizi and Carol remain unchanged.

Carol Becomes Cold.

"However, Carol eventually became colder and came less frequently to Zizi's residence near Bucharest, and finally she went to Paris, where she lived a retired life. In 1925 she had an interview with the Prince at Sinaia (Rumania), in which Carol promised to rejoin her in Paris and to give his name to their child. After that, however, she remained without news of him.

Zizi had been warned at Bucharest that her child might disappear, so she was never willingly separated from him for an hour. That was one of her reasons for wishing to leave Bucharest.

"Mme. Lambrino now would like to send her boy to a school directed by the church, but he has no name, and her means are insufficient to provide suitable instruction for him at home."

The suit Zizi has filed in Paris is expected to bring up the question of the validity of morganatic marriages of European royalties and the rights they confer on the commoner parties.

Neither Party Has Hearing.

Andre Salmon, Zizi's lawyer, lays emphasis on the fact that the marriage was annulled without either Carol or his wife being called for hearing, or receiving warning before the annulment was accomplished.

Salmon contends that the interests of state to which his client yielded at that time have now disappeared because of the Prince's abdication, so that she has the right to claim that her husband resume living with her. The mother and child have their domicile in Paris, Salmon asserts while Carol has no other domicile than the Paris hotel where the writ in the suit was served on him, so the Paris courts have jurisdiction.

It is understood that Henri Robert, considered one of the most celebrated pleaders in France, has been retained by Carol to defend the case. Robert refuses to comment.

TO BAR DEROGATORY LANGUAGE ON RADIO

House Adopts Amendment to Bill Making Offender Liable for Libel.

Post-Dispatch Bureau,
20-23 Wyatt Building.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Democratic members of the House, led by Representative Davis of Tennessee and Wingo of Arkansas, made determined, but unsuccessful, efforts today to have incorporated in the White radio bill several amendments designed to prevent monopolies in broadcasting and in the sale of apparatus and parts.

Alarmed over the strength of the opposition, as manifested when the bill was first reported, Representative Lehlbach (Rep.), New Jersey, in charge of the bill, strengthened his forces, and he was able to block all amendments proposed of any consequence, except one offered by Representative Blanton (Dem.), Texas, which provides that any person using language over the radio derogatory to another shall be liable for libel and slander.

The Blanton amendment was adopted by a vote of 42 to 27, but Representative Lehlbach announced he will ask reconsideration of it when a quorum is present.

Hoping to dispose of the radio bill, the House held a prolonged session and was on the verge of a final vote when Blanton forced an adjournment by making the point of no quorum. The way was paved for a final vote Wednesday.

Lehlbach raised points of order against most of the amendments proposed by the Democrats on the ground that they were not germane, and he was sustained by Representative Madden (Rep.), Illinois, who was presiding. He argued that the proper scope of the bill was to regulate the transmission of messages by radio and not to control the sale of apparatus.

Both Davis and Wingo made fervent speeches at frequent intervals, emphasizing their belief that the pending bill tends to build up a gigantic radio trust.

Republican members declared that the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission provide ample safeguards.

WORK ON U. R. FRANCHISE ORDINANCE NEARING END

Mayor Plans to Submit It by Initiative to Board as Step Toward Election.

The service-at-cost ordinance under which the reorganized United Railways will operate will be ready for submission to the public within two weeks, Mayor Miller said yesterday.

City Counselor Muench and C. E. Smith, consulting engineer for the city in utility cases, are now working on the ordinance. The Mayor plans to submit the ordinance by initiative to the Board of Aldermen when that body convenes on April 20. This requires petitions carrying 5 per cent of the registered voters at the last city election, or about 15,000 names.

It then becomes necessary for the Board of Aldermen to set a date for voting on the franchise. The Mayor as yet will not discuss the ordinance except to say it is based on service-at-cost. This involves city representation in the management of the railways.

COUNTERFEITING PLOT EXPOSED

Outfit for Making U. S. Gold Notes Seized in Juarez.

By the Associated Press.

EL PASO, Tex., March 13.—What is thought to have been an elaborate plot to flood Mexican border towns with counterfeit $50 bills was nipped by Juarez police when a complete outfit for the manufacture of United States gold certificates was seized. While indications were that no counterfeit bills had been printed, United States Secret Service agents here pointed out that the outfit in Juarez probably was a ramification of the ring of counterfeiters operating in Mexico City.

Isaac Miranda, Juarez printer, at whose home the outfit was found, is being held in Juarez in connection with the passing of a counterfeit $50 bill several days ago. The $50 bill passed by Miranda was the product of the Mexico City gang, the agents said. The bill is declared to be an excellent reproduction of the regular $50 United States gold certificate.

"TOO OLD" FOR ARMY BONUS

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, March 13. — Nat Poyntz, 80 years old, field clerk attached to the Quartermaster Corps of the United States regular Army here, the only Confederate veteran on the active duty rolls of the regular army and the oldest man who served in the United States military forces during the world war, has been refused the soldier's bonus, it was learned today. "Too old" was the reason assigned for the refusal of his application in a letter from the Veterans' Bureau headquarters in Washington.

Poyntz served with Morgan's men during the Civil War and was a member of Company C, Ninth Kentucky Cavalry. He has held the grade of field clerk with the Quartermaster Corps more than 40 years and cannot be retired because of the lack of any provision in the retirement laws which would include his case.

SCANT HOPE OF FARM RELIEF FROM CONGRESS THIS SESSION

Leaders of Plans for Legislation to Help Agricultural Interests Have Not Abanoned Hope, but Are Worried Over Delays.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Doubt and anxiety have begun to appear in the ranks of the farm representatives who a fortnight ago confidently marched on Washington, demanding relief legislation.

After long labor a relief bill is taking form in the House Agriculture Committee, but it is a long haul and a rocky road from the committee room to the President's desk at the White House. And administration leaders apparently are counting on an adjournment of Congress some time in May.

Some committee members still predict that a bill will be laid before the President for his signature before Congress goes home, but others qualify their predictions. The farm leaders themselves have by no means abandoned hope, although they manifestly are worried over the difficulties and delays that beset them.

Chief Issues Obscured.

At the very beginning of their invasion of the Capital, the farm delegations were taken back by the unexpected manner of their reception. They were welcomed on every hand, but were told to get together around a table and decide just what it was they wanted. Then the trouble began. The more they consulted with one another and with members of the House Committee the more the whole project became obscured in a cloud of argument and a tangle of technicalities.

Undeniable progress has been made, but the views of many witnesses still are to be heard. Then, after a bill has been perfected, it will have to take its chances in the usual legislative jam that precedes the close of a session. There still are important appropriation bills pending, and the Senate is engulfed with a multiplicity of measures ranging from contested nominations to foreign debt settlements.

To Resume Hearings Monday.

The agriculture committee was not in session today, but on Monday it will resume its hearings with the farm delegation from 11 Middle Western states presenting for the first time a complete draft of its plan for Federal insurance of surplus crops by means of an equalization fee. Besides the members of this delegation, Chairman Haugen has a list of more than a score of prospective witnesses, who want to be heard for or against this or other pending bills. They represent organizations or individual interests connected with agriculture.

Haugen said today the committee could not refuse to hear anyone who cared to come to Washington to discuss relief legislation. Under present plans the testimony will be taken on every one of two dozen pending relief measures if anyone wants to be heard.

Members predict that at least a month will be required to dispose of all the bills. Some say it will be six weeks or longer and that will only mark the beginning of the long process of enacting a relief bill into law.

STATE SCHOOL TAX AMENDMENT PROPOSED

St. Louis County Boards of Education Want to Eliminate Special Elections.

A movement for a constitutional amendment permitting assessment of higher tax rates for school purposes in Missouri, was inaugurated by the St. Louis County Boards of Education, in annual convention at Clayton courthouse yesterday.

The proposal would eliminate the necessity of such special school tax elections as the one to be held in St. Louis March 23, when a proposition to renew the 85-cent tax for city schools for another four years will be voted on.

The amendment of the State Constitution recommended by the county educators would fix the maximum school tax rate, without a special vote, at 65 cents on the $100 valuation in rural districts, and at $1 in city, town and consolidated school districts. The amendment would permit increase of the rural rate to $1.65 and the city rate to $2, for a four-year period, with the approval of a majority of voters at an election in the district.

At present the rural rate is 40 cents, increasable to 65 cents for a one-year period by majority vote, and for the other districts, 60 cents, increasable to $1. At present, St. Louis is the only city that can vote an increase for a four-year period.

The amendment would also permit further increases for repairing or rebuilding schools, if approved by two-thirds of the qualified voters.

The convention appointed a "Home Rule in Taxation" committee, with Sam D. Hodgdon as chairman, which will prepare petitions for circulation through the State with a view to asking that the proposed amendment be placed on the ballot at the general election next fall.

Leaders in the movement describe it as a "common sense" proposition, arguing that virtually every school district in the State assesses its present maximum, while a large number are required to expend considerable sums for special elections each year to maintain higher rates. They maintain that the actual cost of operating schools would be reduced if these "unnecessary expenses" were eliminated.

TRAIN KILLS 2 AT PANA, ILL.

Rerouting Due to Pennsylvania Wreck Probably Caused Accident.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

PANA, Ill., March 13.—Bluford Garrett, 47 years old, a florist, was killed here at 3:30 p. m. today when an automobile oil truck in which he was riding was struck by a westbound Pennsylvania train, and C. A. Simmons, 40, driver of the truck, died at 6:30 from injuries suffered in the accident. Both men were residents of Pana.

Pennsylvania train No. 11, which struck the men, was detoured through this place over the Big Four lines because of a wreck on the Pennsylvania, west of here, this morning. It is believed Garrett and Simmons, familiar with the Big Four schedule, were not aware of the rerouting of the Pennsylvania train, and thought the crossing was safe. The accident occurred near the station.

NEW HEAD CHOSEN OF U. S. MEAT INSPECTION AT CHICAGO

Dr. Herman Bushman Transferred From Post At Omaha As Successor of Dr. Neil.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Dr. Herman Bushman, head of the Government's meat inspection work at Omaha, Neb., has been appointed to take charge of the same work at Chicago, where a series of investigations have been begun by Federal agencies into conditions in connection with trading in livestock. He will succeed to the post held by Dr. Wesley N. Neil, who died last Sunday from the effects of poison which officials think he swallowed accidentally.

Government agents have been investigating for some time various operations in the stockyards of the country, and a number of traders have been suspended under authority granted by the packers and stockyards act. The death of Dr. Neil, however, they have held, was not connected with these investigations.

Dr. Busman has been connected with the department for more than 20 years and has had experience in his work in various parts of the country.

LOCK INVENTOR'S GRANDSON WINS BACK STORY OF LIFE

J. Meredith Towne Recovers Diary From Safety Deposit Box With Court Order.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, March 13.—A court order won past the lock on a safety-deposit box in Evanston today and restored to J. Meredith Towne, grandson of the man who originated Yale locks, his diary, "The Story of My Married Life," and other papers which he declared had been taken from him by his estranged wife.

Towne, who twice in the last three years has separated from his wife, formerly Dorothy Ravin, daughter of an immigrant tailor, went to the bank armed with a writ of replevin, and accompanied by a Deputy Sheriff and a mechanic. Officials of the bank bowed before the writ and Towne gave a bond of $1000 in exchange for the documents.

The Towne marriage was beclouded in 1922 when Towne sought a divorce, charging his wife with unfaithfulness. He withdrew the action, but his wife later sued him for divorce, alleging cruelty. The decree was denied.

INTERPRETS VIEWS OF BEN FRANKLIN ON MODERN ISSUES

Senator Pepper Says Poor Richard Would Approve Coolidge Economy and Debt Policy.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS WOULD AMUSE HIM

Pennsylvania and McKinley of Illinois Speech in Chicago—Latter Denounces Bloc Rule.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, March 13.—How Benjamin Franklin would view present-day problems were he sitting in the United States Senate, and the declaration that the Government "is being well conducted under safe and sane executive leadership," composed the theme of an address by Senator George Wharton Pepper (Rep.) of Pennsylvania here tonight.

Senator William B. McKinley (Rep.) of Illinois declared the tendency toward "bloc government" was "one of the most serious dangers threatening the United States today," and that the impending investigation of the United States Tariff Commission "is nothing else than a political attack on President Coolidge."

Both Senators spoke at the thirty-first anniversary banquet of the Hamilton Club, the largest Republican club in the West.

If Franklin were in the Senate, Pepper said, he would not make a speech. "Franklin believed in getting results by conference with individuals," said Pepper, adding: "My observation is that Senate speeches seldon change votes."

Poor Richard and Coolidge.

"I am quite sure that Franklin would have approved with enthusiasm President Coolidge's attitude on public questions. With poor Richard, thrift was not an austere and forbidding virtue. He regarded it as the indispensable condition of a happy life. A President with a will to economize is a great national asset. He gives effect to the plans and methods of economy worked out by those two great administrators, Andrew W. Mellon and Herbert Hoover."

Franklin would have earnestly "contended for tax reform" in the revenue bill and would have had "contempt for the Paul Pry feature which was happily struck from the bill." As to the army and navy bill, Pepper said Franklin believed "in preparedness is the price of peace."

On foreign debts, according to Pepper, Franklin "would approve the settlement which President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon recommended."

"I can imagine Franklin looking on at the events of the day in Geneva with mingled amusement and concern," the speaker continued.

Defects in the League.

"There are two basic defects in the League of Nations. Each of them is fatal to its permanence and effectiveness. One defect is the attempt to set up machinery for determining for member states the position they are to take in the event of future trouble. The other defect is the attempt to distinguish between little Powers and big ones, and to allot corresponding places to them on the council. It is the futility of advance commitments which is swinging enlightened British opinion against the league covenant. It is the substitution of aristocracy for democracy among nations that is threatening the peace of the league at Geneva. We cannot be too thankful that we are free from these entanglements.

"I venture to think that Franklin would have been one of the first to perceive the distinction between league entanglements, which are a menace, and a safeguarded adherence to the World Court, which is no menace at all. The Senate reservations provide adequate protection to American adherence to the World Court."

On Bloc Government.

McKinley, in his warning against what he called the tendency toward "bloc Government," declared that "if it is not checked, we may find ourselves in a chaotic situation such as is found in France, without any settled policy of government." France's trouble, he said, is the result of bloc government.

Child, scion of a wealthy Springfield, Ill. family, and a senior at Williams College, was found dead in his room at the Alpha Tau Alpha fraternity house today, under circumstances which will be investigated. According to his fraternity brothers, Child gave every indication of being in perfect health when he retired.

Street Car Fatality Held Accident.

A verdict of accident was returned yesterday in the case of Alois Sutter, 66 years old, 2819 Cherokee street, who died Friday from injuries suffered March 1, when he was struck, not far from his residence, by a Cherokee street car.

FOREIGN TRADE OUTLOOK GOOD

Commerce Department Calls 1926 Indications Favorable.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 13.—American foreign trade made gratifying progress in 1925, in the opinion of the Commerce Department, and the outlook for 1926 is "altogether favorable."

In a review made public today the department noted especially the increased exports to European countries, and voiced a hope that European countries were entering a period of industrial progress "undisturbed by internal complications."

The one-third decrease in this country's favorable trade balance last year was attributed to normal healthy causes. It was pointed out that the United States now had become "a great creditor country toward which interest and principal payments must flow, thus tending to increase imports."

THIRD ARREST AFTER MORPHINE SEIZURE

Max Greenberg, Former Gangster, to Be Questioned About the Shipment.

Morris Kanner, an ex-convict on parole, was arrested yesterday on suspicion that he was the consignee of 150 ounces of morphine that was confiscated in a trunk at 1807 North Jefferson avenue, Friday, by Federal narcotic agents investigating what they believe to be an organized band of drug peddlers.

Kanner is said by the police to have been an intimate associate of Max Greenberg, former St. Louis gangster, now living in New York, who is to be questioned in New York, according to the local narcotic agents, in connection with the shipment of drugs to St. Louis for illegal sale to addicts.

An order for the arrest of Kanner followed seizure of the trunk containing the morphine, which was shipped froh New York. It arrived Thursday, and on the same train were three Federal narcotic agents, who watched it in the baggage room of Union Station until Friday, when Arthur Glasdy, 38 years old, a Negro of 2731 Clark avenue, called for it with a truck. The agents trailed Glasdy to the Jefferson avenue address and seized the trunk in a room occupied by Frank Ward. Glasdy and Ward were arrested.

Believing Kanner had some connection with the shipment, police sought him at 4243A West Sacramento avenue. There was no one at home and they forced an entrance and searched the place. They took a pistol, some whisky in bottles and what they say is an opium lamp and opium scales.

Kanner, when arrested later, admitted being at Union Station Friday, but said he was there to see a woman off on a train.

In the room at the Jefferson avenue address five other trunks, similar to the one that arrived Thursday, were found. The narcotic agents believe they had contained previous shipments of drugs to St. Louis.

FORMER OHIO ATHLETE KILLED WIFE WITH CLUB

Jacob Nesbitt, Confessing to Crime, Says She Died Questioning His Love.

By the Associated Press.

TROY, O., March 13.—The last words Frances Nesbitt uttered before she met death at the hands of her husband were:

"Oh, Jake, don't you still love me?"

Jacob Nesbitt, recalled that today as he sat in the semigloom of his cell in jail here, facing a charge of first degree murder for the slaying of his pretty wife, a former Ohio State University swimming and tennis star, in their home here Feb. 19. Other details, too, of the tussle preceding the murder became etched on his mind, as it cleared from the stress and emotion of last night's confession.

Burned Club After Crime.

He recalled he struck his wife with a stick of firewood then burned it. That clears up one of the most profound mysteries of the murder—what weapon was used.

Nesbitt, who also is a graduate of the Ohio university, and a former football star, related details of the killing to Prosecutor L. E. Harvey, telling of them in a faint voice, his eyes sunken and face seamed and lined with fatigue and emotion.

Nesbitt after three weeks of proclaimed innocence during which time he lent his efforts to officials and newspapermen in an effort to solve what had been termed a "perfect crime" last night, after five hours' questioning, broke down and confessed he killed his wife after they had quarreled over business affairs.

Murder Charge Is Filed.

A formal charge of first degree murder was filed against Nesbitt today. He will be arraigned Monday.

Nesbitt's alleged confession and the legal preparations for raising the curtain on the second act of the weird tragedy shared interest as to what his defense will be. His attorney, L. H. Shipman, has asserted he has made no plans, but Prosecuting Attorney Harvey was prepared to fight a plea of temporary insanity. Personal friends and medical advisers of the confessed wife slayer have injected their opinion that he was a victim of paranoia, a progressive form of insanity, resulting from a feeling of persecution.

THE YELLOW DUCK RHYMES

I did not know
  That Wil-liam Goat,
Could dive and swim
  And ev-en float!

I nev-er saw
  A goat be-fore,
That did not think
  Wash-ing a bore.

But this is no
  Plain Bil-ly-goat,
Mr. Wil-liam is
  A goat of note.

An-go-ra is
  His fam-ily name,
And hand-some is
  His spe-cial fame.

This Wil-liam Goat
  Just plunged right in,
Up to the whisk-
  Ers on his chin.

Then he came out
  As white and clean,
As a-ny-thing
  You've ev-er seen.

And Nan-cy Goat
  Stood still and raved,
Be-cause his wool
  Was wa-ter-waved!

The ba-by Goat,
  (The kid, is right)
Skipped all a-bout
  In his de-light.

Then Wil-liam Goat
  And Nan-cy too,
To-geth-er danced
  The Charles-ton through!

Can you think up
  A hap-pi-er sight,
Than these three goats
  Of pur-est white,

Danc-ing to-geth-
  Er on the green,
Where my blue Pond
  Is plain-ly seen?

It took no more
  Than just one glance,
To make me want
  To learn that dance!

The Wonderful Stories of "OZ"

by L. Frank Baum

Betsy Attempts to Save "the Ugly One"

BETSY looked around at the quaint trees. "I don't understand that," she admitted, addressing the Ugly One. "What could you find to eat here?" "The best food in the world," Ugly answered. "Do you see that grove at your left?" he added, pointing it out; "well, such trees as those do not grow in your country, or in any other place but this cavern. I have named them 'Hotel Trees,' because they bear a certain kind of table d'hote fruit called 'Three-Course Nuts.' "

"That's funny!" said Betsy. "What are the 'Three-Course Nuts' like?"

"Something like cocoanuts, to look at," explained the Ugly One. "All you have to do is to pick one of them and then sit down and eat your dinner. You first unscrew the top part and find a cupful of good soup. After you've eaten that, you unscrew the middle part and find a hollow filled with meat and potatoes, vegetables and a fine salad. Eat that, and unscrew the next section, and you come to the dessert in the bottom of the nut. That is pie and cake, cheese and crackers, and nuts and raisins. The Three-Course Nuts are not all exactly alike in flavor or in contents, but they are all good and in each one may be found a complete three-course dinner."

"But how about breakfasts?" inquired Betsy.

"Why, there are Breakfast Trees for that, which grow over there at the right. They bear nuts, like the others, only the nuts contain coffee or chocolate, instead of soup; oatmeal instead of meat and potatoes, and fruits instead of dessert. Sad as has been my life in this wonderful prison, I must admit that no one could live more luxuriously in the best hotel in the world than I have lived here; but I will be glad to get into the open air again and see the good old sun and the silvery moon and the soft green grass and the flowers that are kissed by the morning dew. Ah, how much more lovely are those blessed things than the glitter of gems or the cold gleam of gold!"

"Of course," said Betsy. "I once knew a little boy who wanted to catch the measles, because all the little boys in his neighborhood but him had had 'em, and he was really unhappy 'cause he couldn't catch 'em, try as he would. So I'm pretty certain that the things we want, and can't have, are not good for us. Isn't that true, Shaggy?"

"Not always, my dear," he gravely replied. "If we didn't want anything, we would never get anything, good or bad. I think our longings are natural, and if we act as nature prompts us we can't go far wrong."

"For my part," said Queen Ann, "I think the world would be a dreary place without the gold and jewels."

"All things are good in their way," said Shaggy, "but we may have too much of any good thing. And I have noticed that the value of anything depends upon how scarce it is, and how difficult it is to obtain."

"Pardon me for interrupting you," said King Kaliko, coming to their side, "but now that we have rescued Shaggy's brother, I would like to return to my royal cavern. Being the King of the Gnomes, it is my duty to look after my restless subjects and see that they behave themselves."

So they all turned and began walking through the Metal Forest to the other side of the great domed cave, where they had first entered it. Shaggy and his brother walked side by side and both seemed rejoiced that they were together after their long separation. Betsy didn't dare look at the polka-dot handkerchief, for fear she would laugh aloud; so she walked behind the two brothers and led Hank by holding fast to his left ear.

When at last they reached the place where the passage led to the outer world, Queen Ann said, in a hesitating way that was unusual with her:

"I have not conquered this Gnome Country, nor do I expect to do so; but I would like to gather a few of these pretty jewels before I leave this place."

"Help yourself, ma'am," said King Kaliko, and at once the officers of the Army took advantage of his royal permission and began filling their pockets, while Ann tied a lot of diamonds in a big handkerchief.

This accomplished, they all entered the passage, the gnomes going first to light the way with their torches. They had not proceeded far when Betsy exclaimed:

"Why, there are jewels here, too!"

All eyes were turned upon the ground, and they found a regular trail of jewels strewn along the rock floor.

"This is queer!" said Kaliko, much surprised. "I must send some of my gnomes to gather up these gems and replace them in the Metal Forest, where they belong. I wonder how they came to be here?"

All the way along the passage they found this trail of jewels, but when they neared the end the mystery was explained. For there, squatted upon the floor with his back to the rock wall, sat old Ruggedo, puffing and blowing as if he was all tired out. Then they realized it was he who had scattered the jewels, from his many pockets, which one by one had burst with the weight of their contents as he had stumbled along the passage.

"But I don't mind," said Ruggedo, with a deep sigh. "I now realize that I could not have carried such a weighty load very far, even had I managed to escape from this passage with it. The woman who sewed the pockets on my robe used poor thread, for which I will thank her."

"Have you any jewels left?" inquired Betsy.

He glanced into some of the remaining pockets.

"A few," said he, "but they will be sufficient to supply my wants, and I no longer have any desire to be rich. If some of you will kindly help me to rise, I'll get out of here and leave you, for I know you all despise me, and prefer my room to my company."

Shaggy and Kaliko raised the old King to his feet, when he was confronted by Shaggy's brother, whom he now noticed for the first time. The queer and unexpected appearance of the Ugly One so startled Ruggedo that he gave a wild cry and began to tremble, as if he had seen a ghost.

"Wh—wh—who is this?" he faltered.

"I am that helpless prisoner whom your cruel magic transformed from a handsome man into an ugly one!" answered Shaggy's brother, in a voice of stern reproach.

"Really, Ruggedo," said Betsy, "you ought to be ashamed of that mean trick."

"I am, my dear," admitted Ruggedo, who was now as meek and humble as formerly he had been cruel and vindictive.

"Then," returned the girl, "you'd better do some more magic and give the poor man his own face again."

"I wish I could," answered the old King; "but you must remember that Tititi-Hoochoo has deprived me of all my magic powers. However, I never took the trouble to learn just ho to break the charm I cast over Shaggy's brother, for I intended he should always remain ugly."

'Every charm," remarked pretty Polychrome, "has its antidote; and, if you knew this charm of ugliness, Ruggedo, you must have known how to dispel it."

He shook his head.

"If I did—I've forgotten," he stammered regretfully.

"Try to think!" pleaded Shaggy, anxiously.

"Please try to think!"

Ruggedo ruffled his hair with both hands, sighed, slapped his chest, rubbed his ear, and stared stupidly around the group.

"I've a faint recollection that there was one thing that would break the charm," said he; "but misfortune has so addled my brain that I can't remember what it was."

"See here, Ruggedo," said Betsy, sharply, "we've treated you pretty well, so far, but we won't stand for any nonsense, and if you know what's good for yourself you'll think of that charm!"

"Why?" he demanded, turning to look wonderingly at the little girl.

"Because it means so much to Shaggy's brother. He's dreadfully ashamed of himself, the way he is now, and you're to blame for it. Fact is, Ruggedo, you've done so much wickedness in your life that it won't hurt you to do a kind act now."

Ruggedo blinked at her, and sighed again, and then tried very hard to think.

"I seem to remember, dimly," said he, "that a certain kind of a kiss will break the charm of ugliness."

"What kind of a kiss?"

"What kind? Why, it was—it was—it was either the kiss of a Mortal Maid; or—or—the kiss of a Mortal Maid who had once been a Fairy; or—or the kiss of one who is still a Fairy. I can't remember which. But of course no maid, mortal or fairy, would ever consent to kiss a person so ugly—so dreadfully, fearfully, terribly ugly—as Shaggy's brother."

He said, "I love you and if you marry me I will take you to my castle and lock you up." She answered, "I will not marry any one I do not love." And she was taken to the tower.

Now Princess Esmy had a pet pigeon and when he saw his mistress carried away he followed her to the tower.

She was there about two days when she sent a note to her father by her pigeon. This is what the note said, "Dear father, I am locked in the castle at the end of the forest. Please come and take me home." This note was answered some time later by her father. But when a person came to rescue her it was not her father. It was a handsome prince instead.

On the way home this is the story he told. "I was changed into that ugly man you saw by my wicked stepmother until I might rescue a beautiful princess from a certain tower, and you have brought me back my own self-form. Will you marry me?" She was so glad that all she could say was "Yes!"

And the next day they were married and lived happily ever after.—Minnie Padgug.

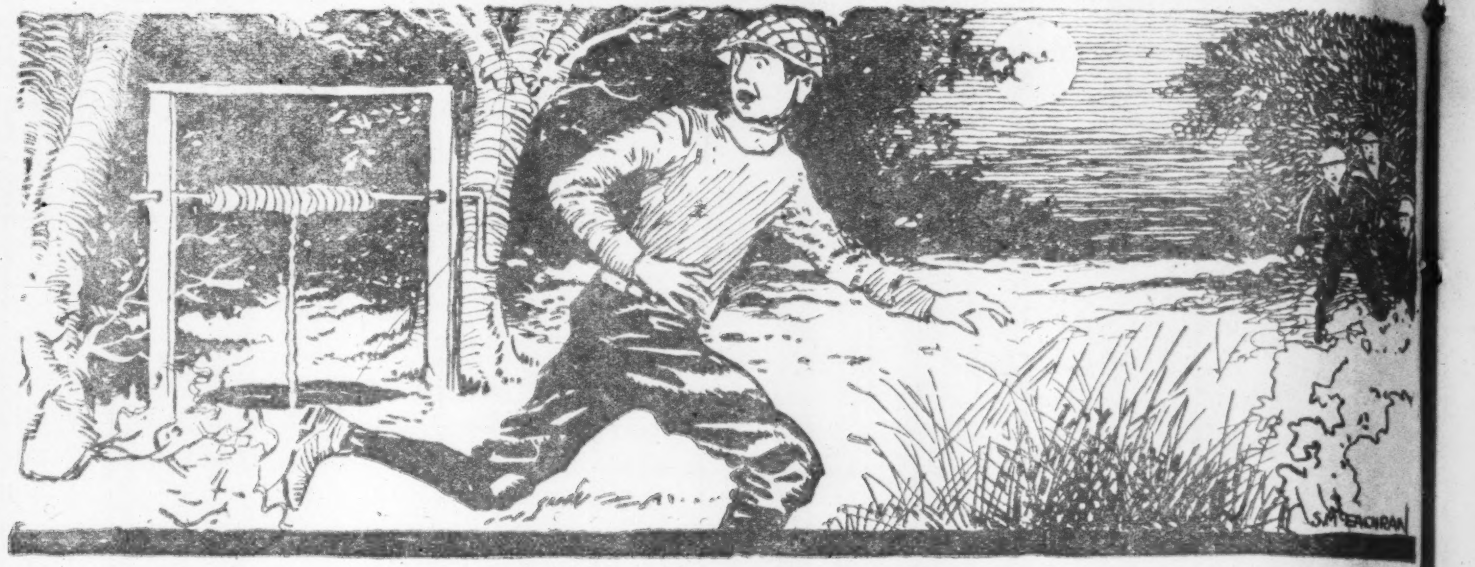
Old Man Johnson's Queer Well

By FRANK A. SECORD



Jimmy Started Like a Pursued Rabbit Toward His Friends.

On a hillside Old Man Johnson's orchard spread over several acres. At the foot of this lay a vineyard famous for its luscious fruit and wonderful yield. Old Man Johnson, a real miser, worried year after year because about the time his trees and vines began to bear ripened fruit, their locality was a constant source of temptation for the youth of the nearby town. It was said that the old miser spent many sleepless nights trying to figure out some way of keeping prowlers off his place, which was not guarded for the reason that he lived in town and was too stingy to hire someone to live on the premises.

One day the miser came back to town after a visit to his property, frightened almost to death. People remarked that he was "putting on" and that he had at last devised a scheme to protect his fruit. However, a physician had to be called to attend the old fellow and even then folks claimed he was playing a shrewd game, even to the extent of bribing the doctor to spread a tale of real illness. "He's had a fright and no mistake!" insisted the man of medicine. "His nerves are unstrung and something gave him a jolt that will be hard to get over."

Old Man Johnson claimed to have heard a voice of distress from an old well situated in the orchard. "It yelled," he stated, "and called for help. Sounded like a man drowning. I ran there, looked in, saw the water without a ripple down in the hole, heard nothing but the voice and nobody was in sight in or out of the well. I dropped the well rope down and it hung limp. Nobody grabbed it."

The orchard trees hung heavy with fruit, the grapes in the vineyard so loaded the vines that they sagged with the burden, and as it lacked but a few days before the first rippening frost was due the old man worried more than usual.

"Seems as if some spook is doing Old Man Johnson a good turn," remarked Bub Wilcox, the fattest boy in town and well known to be the biggest boob and greatest coward.

"Yeah!" Sam Barnes grunted as he poked a stick of gum into his mouth. "He don't have to worry about you, Bub!" laughing.

"Oh, I don't know!" the other sneered. "I'm not afraid of the spooks in his well. Shucks, I'd hate to be accused of running away from such a thing!"

"You'd never run, for the very good reason that you'd never have cause," Slim declared.

One evening some days later, when asked to join a small crowd of boys on an expedition to Old Man Johnson's vineyard for a few hatfuls of grapes, Bub Wilcox declined, giving as a reason that he didn't feel like it.

"Sure, you don't feel like it!" Clyde Mason derisively shouted. "I wouldn't, either, were I a flunker like you!"

Bob made no reply to the sally, but walked on, turned a corner and hurried home.

There was a big harvest moon that night. The lads, bent on helping themselves to Johnson's grapes, set out in time to reach their destination before the moon rose, and under cover of the twilight gloom secreted themselves near the vineyard and, snuggled close together, giggled in undertones and discussed the "drowning spook" of the well.

"He ought to be making a squawk by this time," suggested Slim Barnes, nudging a companion. "You know this is the hour for bats, witches and other uncanny things."

"Perhaps he's fully drowned by this time and won't make any noise," another ventured.

When the moon came the boys filled their hats, selecting the ripest bunches of grapes to be found. This done, they retreated as noiselessly as possible, intending to return to town with their booty, which was considered legitimate spoils taken from a miser.

"There's the old well now," whispered Slim Barnes, raising a hand and pointing towards the dark box over the alleged spooky spot. "Who wants a drink?"

The banter was made only in fun and Slim, although no coward, did not himself relish the idea of going closer to the well; therefore he was a little frustrated when Jimmy Sears promptly answered, "I'm dry—I am—and will go."

The little crowd paused and nobody spoke until Jimmy impatiently asked, "Are we going to the well? If so, come on!"

"Maybe the water isn't good," remarked Slim. "You know the well hasn't been used in a long time."

"You think it's unhealthy to go near it just because a crazy old miser says there's a spook in it, eh?" muttered Jimmy. "I am not afraid to go there alone, if none of you will go with me. That's the kind of a kid I am!"

Slim Barnes kicked the dirt with a toe of a shoe; Clyde Mason bit his finger nails and the other lads gazed at the moon and towards the town in the distance.

With a rough growl Jimmy Sears started towards the well. Seizing the rope and pushing the bucket off its resting place on the edge of the curbing, he grasped the windlass and the contraption wheezed and creaked dismally as the bucket descended. The other boys watched the actions of their chum, who waved a hand at them, and a broad grin could be seen overspreading his face against which the moon shone.

Of a sudden Jimmy dropped his arm and the windless crank, jumped about three feet straight up and then started like a pursued rabbit towards his friends, none of whom, so far, had seen or heard anything; but before the boy reached them a terrible cry came from the well, followed by appeals for help, and then shrieks as of a human in great distress arose upon the night air. There was no mistaking the origin of the noises. Very plainly, indeed, they came from the well.

"Beat it!" gasped Jimmy Sears, pushing his friends before him and then outdistancing them as the crowd hoofed it on the double-quick out of the orchard.

The boys did not, in their fright and haste to make a safe get-away, think of their hats and the headgear was accordingly left behind, filled with grapes. Once out in the open highway, Jimmy turned and waited for the others to catch up. Panting, he recited a hair-rasing tale. "The bucket had just touched the water," he said, "when a voice cried from below, after I heard a gurgling sound or two, 'Help!' Then there was a noise as of someone splashing in the water and the shrieks followed. Say, Old Man Johnson wasn't so crazy after all, kids! He sure heard something."

"We all heard most of it!" gasped Slim Barnes. "Did you see anything in the well?"

Indignantly Jimmy Sears looked upon Slim before he replied and then blurted, "Did I see anything in the well? Did you? All of you had as good a chance to see what was in the well as I did. Who peeked in to joke with the ghost? Did I? Did I? Did I? Well, I guess yes, not!"

"Where's your lid?" one of the boys inquired of Jimmy.

"Where's yours?" retorted the other, quickly; and then the inquirer remembered for the first time that all the hats were back yonder in the orchard.

"Mine isn't worth more than fifteen cents anyway!" Slim Barnes remarked, consoling himself with the loss.

"And if mine were worth fifteen dollars, I'd let it go, I bet!" another declared.

"Fine lay-out, I must chirp," Jimmy mused. "All of our hats are back there full of grapes, nicely laid 'side by each' for somebody to find tomorrow. Grape thieves, folks will say of us, not to mention the fact that Old Man Johnson, when he gets wind of the affair, will have us arrested, more than likely."

"We must get the lids!" Slim firmly decided.

"We must, but how?" Jimmy asked. "I, for one, though, am not going back there—leastwise, not tonight."

"We must get 'em, though!" another lad agreed and then there was quickly organized a committee of the whole to formulate a plan. It was decided that Slim, who had an alarm clock at home, would set the thing to go off at 5 a. m., he was to get up, waken the other boys and together, after the gray of the morning broke, all were to return to the orchard, retrieve the hats and then skedaddle back to town before anybody stirred.

Accordingly in the dusky morning the hatless boys set out. The hillside appeared eerie enough, and when the prowlers arrived at the vineyard they trembled. The old well was perfectly quiet. With a determined dash, the boys made for the spot where the hats were left, gained it, found none, retreated filled with fear and did not pause until the road was reached. "Well," gasped Jimmy Sears, "this is worse than trying to pull teeth from a mosquito's mouth!"

"The hats!" exploded Clyde. "Where are they?"

"Suppose the ghost carried them home for us! No doubt we'll find them there, when we return," sneered Slim Barnes. "If he keeps 'em he's welcome to mine, just so he don't use it as evidence against us."

"Home, chauffeur, and don't mind the meter!" Jimmy cried, starting towards the town. It was too much for him.

When the lads reached their homes, worried and decidedly beaten, with visions of Old Man Johnson's wrath before them, each was dumfounded to find his hat lying on the porch, hanging on a gate or half chucked into a mail box!

Nobody could figure it out.

Later in the day Bub Wilcox met Slim Barnes and, with a queer smile, remarked that he dreamed during the night of hearing Old Man Johnson's spook crying for help. Slim grew suspicious at once and his suspicions became very pronounced upon observing that Bub's teeth were discolored, his lips were blue and his fingers stained.

Without answering, Bub inquired, "Were you there?"

Slim held up his hands, exposed his tongue and teeth for reply. The boys of the crowd had eaten but a very few grapes, therefore no tell-tale evidence was visible.

It was beyond belief that Bub Wilcox had anything to do with the spook business, but he did. Bub knew all about it. He it was who frightened Old Man Johnson in the first place and he it was who gave the boys the scare of their lives.

Bub owned a portable phonograph and that's the whole story. He placed the machine in the well, dangling to the end of a string. Another cord was hooked to the catch, so that at any time desired the instrument could be set in action. Bub gave Old Man Johnson his fright in order to make it easier for neighborhood lads to get a little of the plentiful store of fruit in the orchard when the right time came. The scheme worked so well that Bub decided to try it on the crowd who went the night before.

When Jimmy Sears started the bucket down the well, Bub pulled the string from a hiding place, the phonograph began its weird performance upon a record that the boy made himself with a reproducer, for the occasion. He greatly enjoyed the success of his scheme, and when Slim and his companions retreated, Bub secured the hats, and in the morning delivered each to the home of its owner. He knew nothing at all about the boys returning to the orchard; and it so happened that he delivered the hats when the youngsters were absent on their second trip.

It was many months before the truth of the spook in Old Man Johnson's well was known to the boys, and when it was finally understood, Bub was quietly voted a "humdinger."

"Oh, yes, thank you," answered the child politely. "I've often had it as tough as this at home."

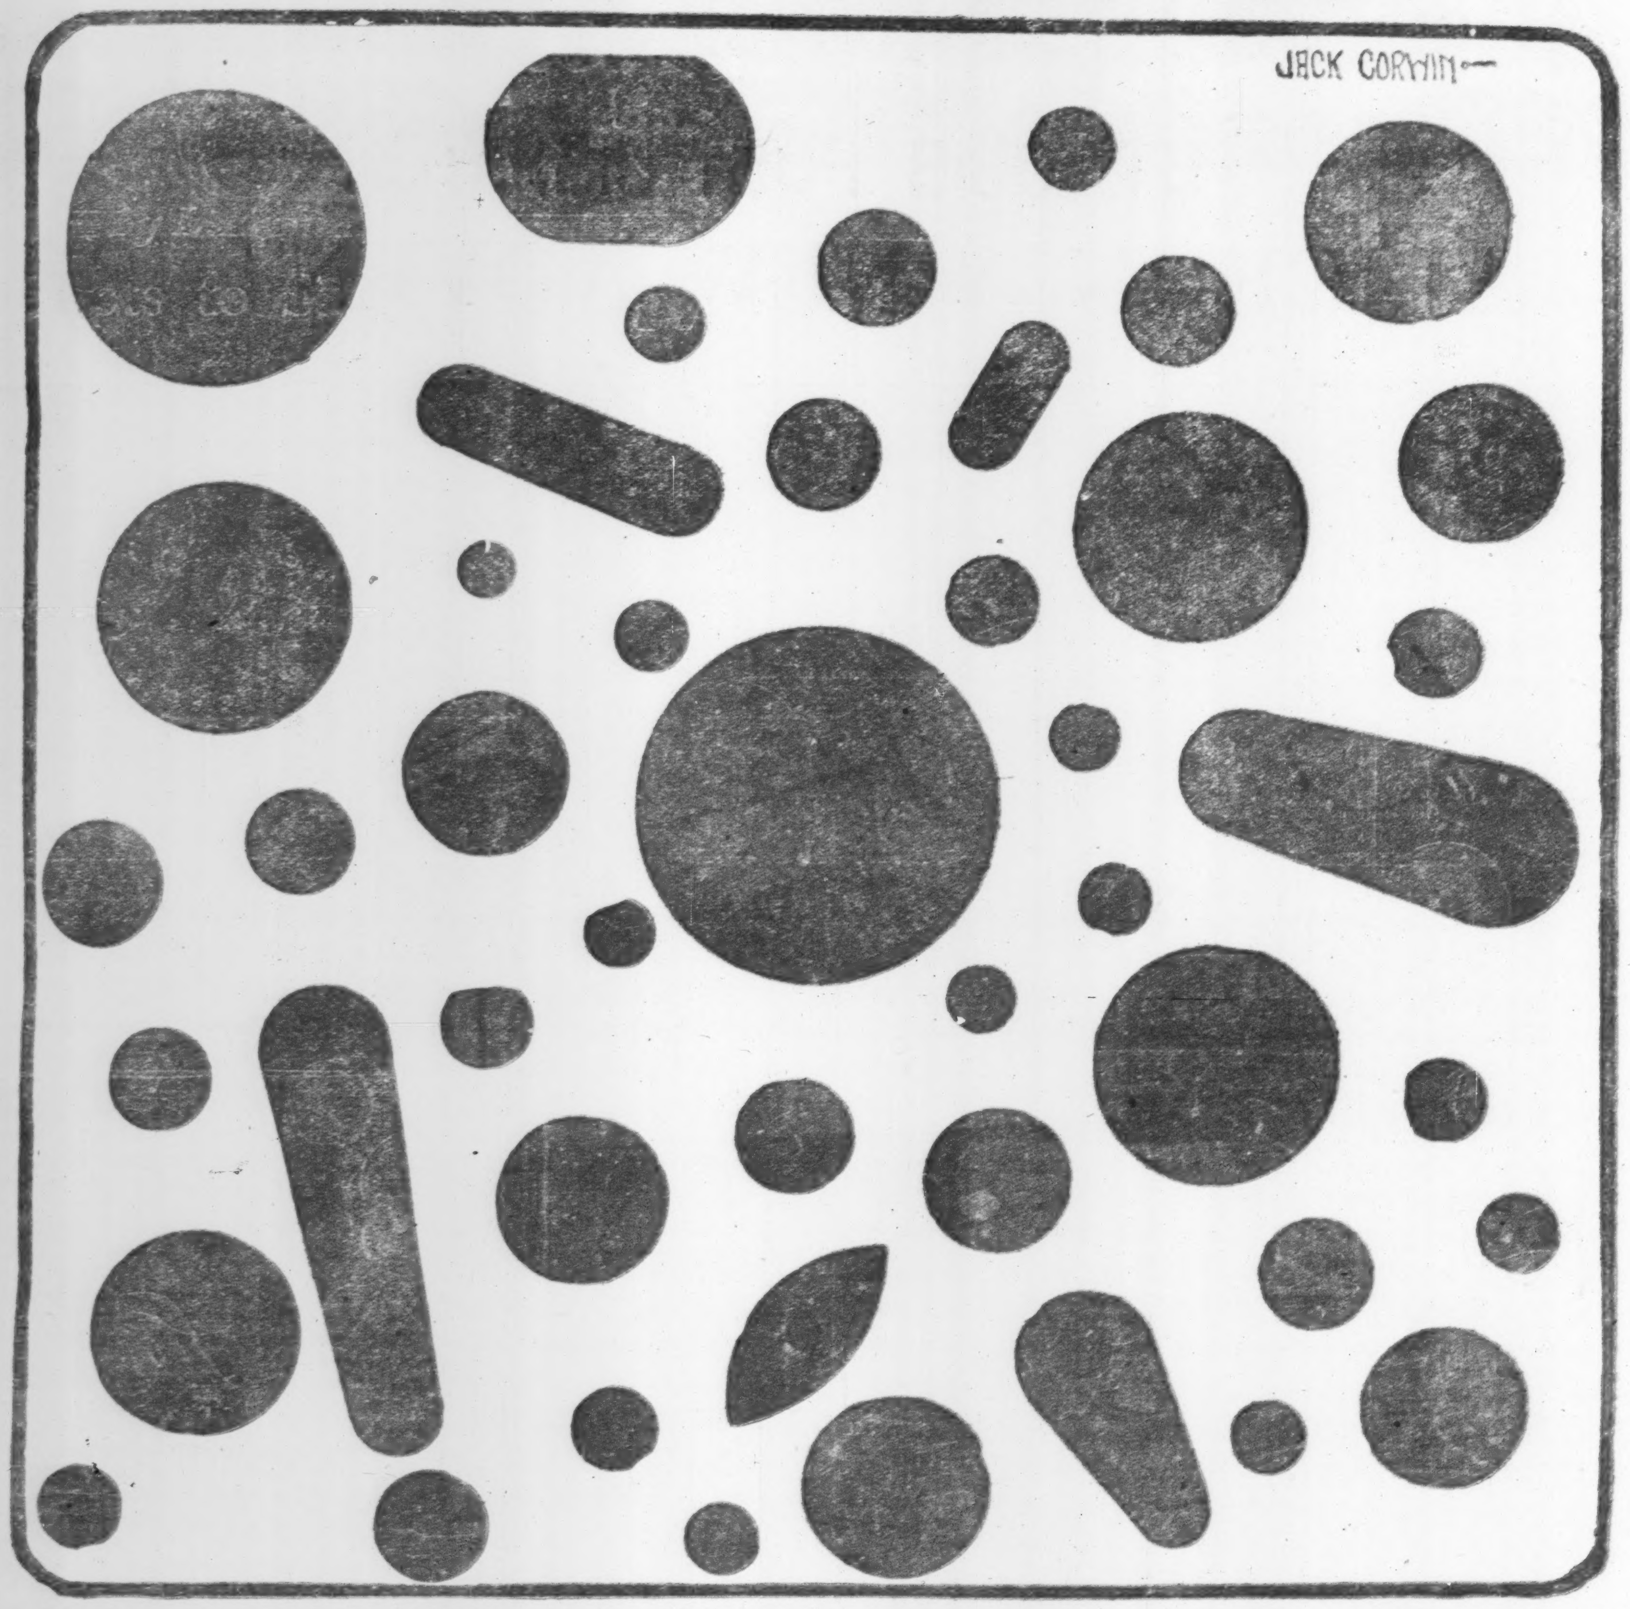
"Chummy! Chummy!" snorted the pedestrian who had been bowled over. "It was downright familiar, that's what it was."

HOW MANY SPOTS ARE THERE?

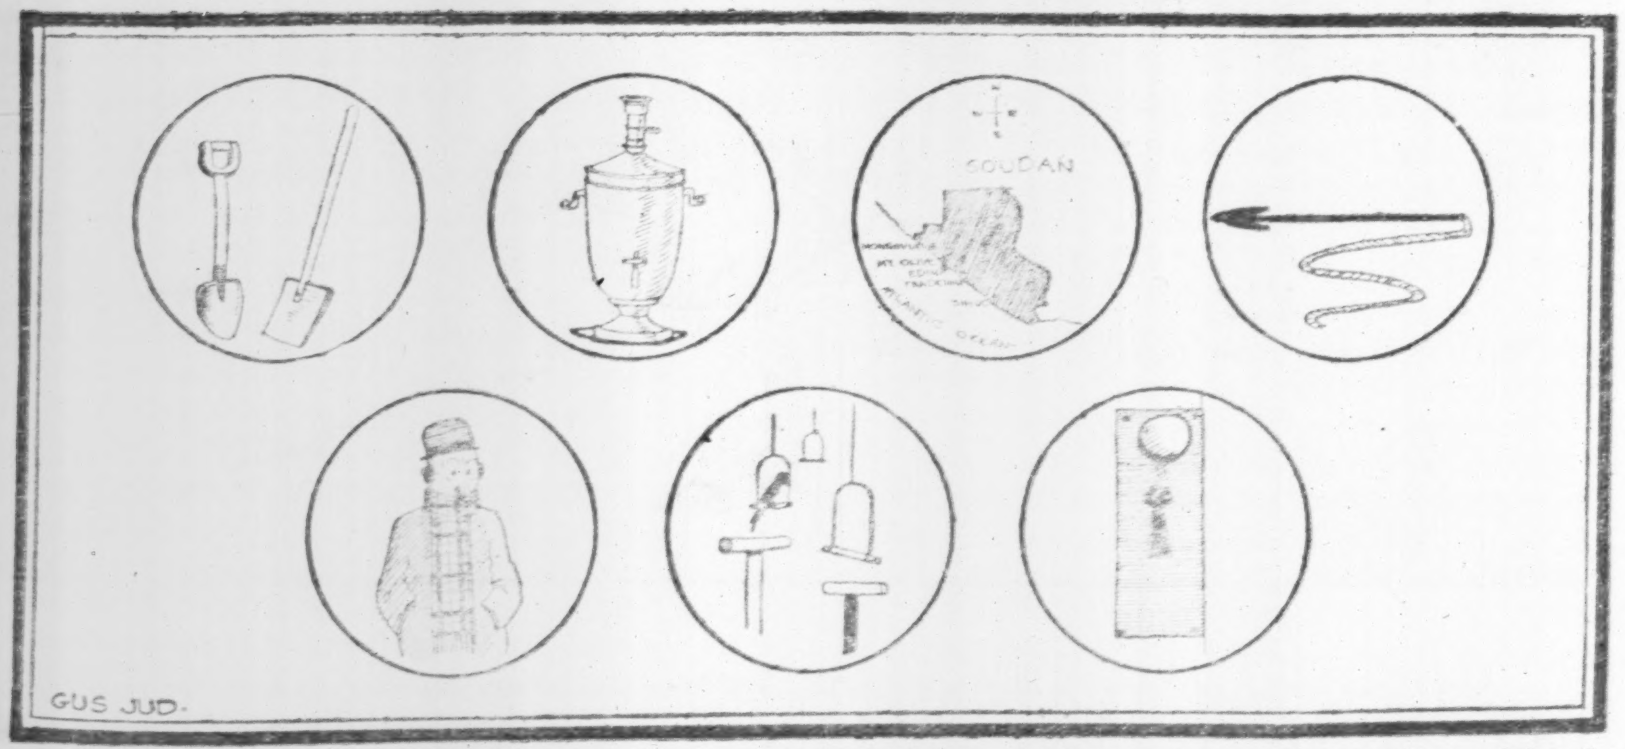


JACK CORWIN—

Here is a chance to test your ability to estimate accurately by the use of the eye. The spots on the drawing above have been deliberately arranged as to size so as to deceive the eye at the first casual glance. Hang this page on the wall, stand about ten feet away, and look at it for not more than five seconds. Then write down your estimate of the number of spots in the drawing. Get your friends and relatives to try the test with you. When all have made their estimates, a count of the dots will show the winner, who is, of course, the one whose number is nearest the actual total.

You will be surprised to find how widely different are the estimates of your friends. There may be a divergence of as high as twenty between the scores of the winner and the one whose number is farthest away.

WHAT CITY IS BURIED HERE?



Each of the above pictured objects may be described by a word of seven letters. When rightly guessed and written one below the other in the proper order, the first letter of the first word, the second of the second, the third of the third, and so on, reading downward, will spell the name of a prominent Southern city on the Mississippi River.

Five Cents for Alimony

And, at That, Young Bourne Is Heir to $85,000,000!
And His Wife's Name Was Clancy—and Thereby Hangs a Tale.

ARTHUR K. BOURNE JR., the $85,000,000 bridegroom, wearing his golden smile.

PEGGY BRENNAN, actress, said to be "the other woman."

MRS. BOURNE. Her name was Clancy—and she lived up to it.

By ARTHUR HENRY STRAWN

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Arthur K. Bourne Jr.'s maiden name was Beatrice Clancy—a fact innocent enough in itself. But it is her young husband's deep regret that the ancestry implied by that name was a detail which he completely overlooked during a little domestic scene some time ago. For a young and patient wife, even though her maiden name was Clancy, to forgive an injury on the part of a husband, is certainly not so surprising as to deserve comment. But for a young wife, particularly if her maiden name was Clancy, to accept in addition what she considered a flagrant insult without rising in wrath to wield even a metaphorical shillalah would certainly cause no end of astonishment. And in dealing with his wife, nee Clancy, Arthur Bourne Jr. seems to have made the profound mistake of adding insult to injury, with uncomfortable results.

For when Arthur, who is by way of being 22 years old, the grandson of the late head of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., and heir to his $85,000,000 estate, came home one day and, according to his wife's story, announced that he had married too young and that he was through with her and was going to leave her so that he could run around and sow his wild oats, his wife was deeply hurt. She burst into tears, begged him to reconsider and then resigned herself patiently to wait until her young and capricious lord would show the change of heart which she was confident would follow in time.

If Bourne had let the matter rest there, there is no telling how long his wife might have waited. It is certain she would not seek a divorce, for, as she says, she is a Catholic and her religion forbids such a step. As it was, she lost 15 pounds, she says, in weeping and worrying over her plight, and it is not difficult to believe that she would have just gone on languishing away had her husband not aroused her ire. But when, one day, he told her, she says, to get a divorce, and then threw a 5-cent piece at her, remarking: "And there's your alimony. That's all you're going to get," Mrs. Bourne, nee Clancy, was infuriated. She immediately gathered evidence and then instituted a suit for separation and a share of that $85,000,000 estate. And judging by the evidence presented to Supreme Court Justice Tierney recently, Mr. Bourne is going to realize that it is a very undiplomatic gesture to toss a 5-cent piece as alimony to a young wife, particularly if her maiden name was Clancy.

THERE was a time, of course, when young Bourne would have considered that spending less than a hundred times that amount on his present wife was a grave injustice to the tender feelings he entertained toward her. But that was in the halcyon days preceding their marriage. Bourne then lived at Oakdale, the magnificent family estate on Long Island. It is the largest private estate in New York, if not in all the United States. It covers 3000 acres, bordering on the sea, and includes a mansion that cost $3,000,000. There are tennis courts, a swimming pool, a running track and an army of servants. It is, after a manner of speaking, some estate. And here, in his pre-marital days, young Arthur lived the easy life which is the due portion of young men destined to inherit $85,000,000.

Now, if the Bourne estate had not bordered on the sea, there might be an entirely different story to tell. For there was a Mr. and Mrs. John F. Clancy who lived at Astoria, Long Island. And Mr. Clancy, a prosperous contractor, was in the habit of occupying a cottage each summer near the sea and not far from the Bourne estate. It was cool and pleasant there, and altogether a delightful place for their young daughter, Beatrice, to spend her vacations from the exclusive Lady Cliffe Academy.

And one day Beatrice Clancy, a young miss just emerging from short dresses, met Arthur Bourne, himself only recently the proud possessor of long trousers. They met on the beach and became very friendly. Swimming parties and dances at the big Bourne mansion and tennis games usually found these two together. And so it went until September, 1922, when young Bourne, then 19 years old, decided that Miss Clancy had seen enough of Lady Cliffe Academy, but not enough of the Bourne mansion. And Beatrice Clancy, being also 19, was easily persuaded to share that belief. The upshot of it was that one bright autumnal day Arthur Bourne took his pretty neighbor and playmate for a ride in his automobile over to Center Moriches, on Long Island, and there they were married.

THERE was a lovely honeymoon to California, and when the young couple returned the bridegroom's father presented them with a little plot of ground amounting altogether to about 45 acres, and built them a love nest containing 18 rooms. And in order that the newlyweds wouldn't be inconvenienced by living on an estate on Long Island, the fond parent added an expensive automobile to his gifts. Bourne's father and mother each gave a generous allowance to their son, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bourne Jr. were off to what might be called a good start. Certainly one better than the average.

And so the young couple struggled along for about two years. When in New York, they stayed at the Biltmore Hotel or lived in an apartment on Park avenue. Bourne occasionally held jobs with the Singer Sewing Machine Company, but it is not evident that he did much more than draw a salary. His mother, however, didn't want him to work even that much, because, as she said, "No gentleman ought to work before he is 26." Bourne's father felt that the young man ought to do something "worth while," and so young Bourne compromised in the manner referred to above. The couple lived at the rate of about $300 a week, which, if not strikingly economical, is certainly not extravagant for an heir to an $85,000,000 estate.

In August, 1924, the young Bournes received an invitation to visit their friends, Commander and Mrs. Edward Spafford, at their summer home at Thousand Islands. Arthur told his wife to go up and promised that he would join her there a few days later. Arthur failed to join his wife, but the letters he sent her, if not models of grammer, were certainly models of affectionate expression. They began with "Dear Sweetheart." They were liberally sprinkled with "honey" and "darling." They contained solicitous inquiries about her health and wanted to know how much she missed him. And their conclusion was, "Lots of love and kisses from your affectionate Hubbie." Mrs. Bourne probably showed these devotional offerings to her hosts, although it is not unlikely that her recollection of English as taught in Lady Cliffe Academy prevented that proud display.

WHEN Mrs. Bourne returned to New York her dutiful husband met her at the station and they motored out to their place on Long Island. He was very interested in her trip. He was sorry he hadn't been able to join her. How were the Spaffords? Had she missed him? Did she have a good time? He was glad to see her again. . . . But before Mrs. Bourne found time to answer all her husband's eager questions he received a telephone call. About business, he said. He'd have to go to New York right away, but he'd be back that night, although probably late. A hurried kiss and he was gone.

But young Mr. Bourne didn't come home that night, says his wife, not even late. In fact, Mrs. Bourne didn't hear from him for five days. She was so distracted that she was about to ask the police to search for him when he finally turned up. And when Mrs. Bourne asked him for some sort of explanation, he made a startling declaration. He informed her, she says, that it was his mature conclusion that he had married too young.

"You don't appeal to me any more," Mrs. Bourne quotes her husband as saying. "I guess you'd better go to Reno and get a divorce."

"I PLEADED with my husband and cried," related Mrs. Bourne, "and even got down on my knees to him and begged him to change his mind about separating. But he shook me off and said he was tired of me. He said something about never having sown his wild oats and that he wanted to run around and have a good time. He said he might get over it in a couple of months."

But Bourne wasn't entirely selfish in his attitude, it seems, for he advised his wife that she, in the meantime, should "be having a good time, too, and not worry about him."

That was the beginning of a period of married widowhood which caused the 20-year-old wife to weep away, she declares, 15 pounds of pulchritude. She resigned herself to patient waiting. Bourne, in the meantime, packed up and went to California. He lived in Hollywood for a few months and eventually returned to New York. Mrs. Bourne learned of her Lochinvar's return from the West and arranged for him to meet her at the Spafford home. There was a discussion. Bourne repeated his demand for a divorce. Mrs. Bourne replied that such a course was out of the question, and she went on to suggest that since he was her husband he might contribute somewhat to her support. That was too much for Bourne.

"Well, then, if you don't get one, I will," he exclaimed. And tossing a 5-cent piece on the floor, added words to the effect that that was to be her alimony. With that he walked out, says his wife.

THAT, in turn, was also too much for Mrs. Bourne. His neglect and indifference she might stand, but for him to insult her in that fashion before friends was positively unendurable. And with an alacrity and thoroughness that did credit to her outraged senses, Mrs. Bourne set out to convince her husband that although his domestic defections might be tolerated, his manners certainly would not.

And the facts which Mrs. Bourne was able to lay before Justice Tierney are not such as would be calculated to bring pleasure to her husband. For one thing, she declared that the cause of her husband's sudden lack of interest in his wife was due to his equally sudden affection for Peggy Brennan, member of a chorus in a vaudeville house in New York. When Bourne went to Hollywood it was not so much to escape his home as it was to establish another one, says his wife. For Bourne went to Hollywood, and there, with Miss Brennan, occupied a $300-a-month apartment on High Tower drive, according to Mrs. Bourne. Bourne's father, then in California, urged his son to return to his wife, but it seems with no success. Bourne wrote to his daughter-in-law that he had tried to make his son "give up the other woman," but that the son "decided against me."

Bourne then returned to New York. There, his wife alleges, under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Bugher, he and Peggy Brennan took an apartment on West 173d street. The assumed name is that of a man, now dead, who was formerly a Police Commissioner of New York and a neighbor of the Bournes on Long Island. In renting the apartment, it is said, Bourne gave his own name as reference. Employes of the apartment house identified Miss Brennan as Bourne's companion.

MRS. BOURNE testified that she visited the apartment and found that its furnishings included pieces of furniture and other articles that had been given to her as wedding gifts. She also identified a letter found there, in her husband's handwriting and addressed to "Peggy, dear girl." The letter told how happy the writer was that she was "coming home to your own sweet daddy," and was decorated with more than a hundred x's, meant for kisses.

The manager of a gown shop then testified that Bourne was the man who came into her shop last fall with a woman other than Mrs. Bourne. The two purchased a coat and three hats, she said. Later, suit was brought against Bourne for $328 and a judgment was entered against him.

Taken any way you please, the evidence which Mrs. Bourne presented for the Judge's inspection was more than a little convincing. It established, certainly, that there are limits beyond which it is not wise to push even the most patient of wives. Bourne, however, being a young man in his very early twenties and heir to an $85,000,000 estate, may conclude that he was simply a little too careless in handling his money, particularly a certain 5-cent piece. Especially since his wife's maiden name was Clancy.

FOOD

For Thought and to Eat

SOME STARTLING IDEAS

"MOST of our health rules were made for sick people."

"BUT, DOCTOR, I just can't eat eggs or drink milk."

Eat Raw Food! * * * Drink All the Coffee You Want! * * * Eat Between Meals! * * * "Chew Your Food Well" Means Nothing! * * * Eat Fast if You Want to! * * * That Is Some of the "Dynamite" Set Off by Doctor Victor E. Levinne, Professor of Nutrition at Creighton Medical School.

By HARRY R. BURKE

Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

OMAHA, Nebraska.—It was dynamite, nothing else, that Dr. Victor E. Levinne, professor of nutrition in Creighton University Medical School, was exploding. And the students of the biology and chemistry classes of the Omaha high schools looked at their teachers and their teachers looked at the students, as they sat in the auditorium of the Technical High School while detonation after detonation marked the destruction of educational idols.

"Most of our health rules were made for sick people," Dr. Levinne was saying, "and just remember that you are well.

"Drink all the coffee you want if coffee doesn't hurt you. Strawberries cause hives with some people, but that is no reason we shouldn't eat strawberries if they don't hurt us. The same is true of coffee.

"Some folks say don't drink water before a meal," he continued. "Some folks say don't drink water within an hour or two after a meal. Some folks say don't drink water with your meals. All I have to say is, drink water and plenty of it. It doesn't make any difference whether you drink it at meal times or not."

He was warming to his subject. "They tell you, too, not to eat between meals. Mealtime is only a convenience, not a law. Man naturally would eat like the animals, whenever he was hungry and could get food. But when man had to earn a living by the sweat of his brow he reached a place where he couldn't stop to eat whenever he wanted and still earn a living. So meal times were established—purely a convenience. But the old law still rules—except for habit. The natural way is to eat whenever you wish.

"Most of our food likes and dislikes are just habit—nothing else. Of course, some foods cause certain persons trouble—like asthma, hives, hay fever and the like. But most of us don't eat certain things from pure habit and nothing else.

"There are people who all their lives have refused to eat milk or eggs. Then milk and eggs are prescribed for them because the physicians have discovered that they have tuberculosis.

"'But, doctor, I just can't eat eggs or drink milk,' they say.

"'All right, then,' says the doctor, only he says it in a way that is more considerate and less abrupt, 'all right, then, die!'

"So they begin to eat eggs and drink milk, and after they are cured they still eat eggs and drink milk. They have formed a habit.

"There's 'Pokey,' our laboratory cat," and Dr. Levinne pointed to the stool on the platform beside him, where "Pokey" was sitting cuddling a group of white rats.

"What would you say was the natural food of a cat?" Dr. Levinne asked. "You'd say mice, and rats. But 'Pokey' has food habits, just like you have and I have. Instinct doesn't rule 'Pokey.' We got the cat when it was a kitten. It grew up with our white rats. 'Pokey' wouldn't any more think of making a meal off one of them than you'd think of eating a steak from a pet pony.

"And it isn't because 'Pokey' can't catch them, either. If one of the rats gets away from us we call 'Pokey' and 'Pokey' catches it. 'Pokey' is the laboratory policeman. And never yet has that cat injured one of our rats in the slightest."

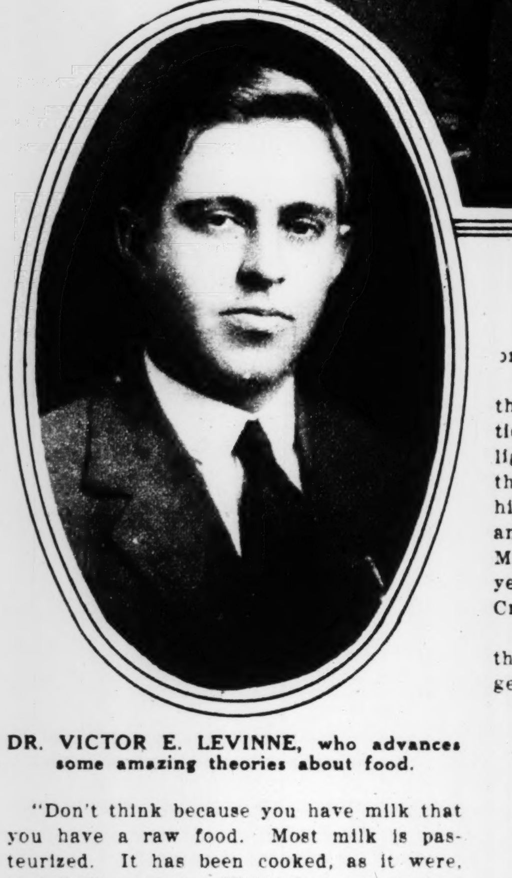
Dr. Levinne was back again at the business of shattering idols.

"THEY tell you," he said, "to brush your teeth and you will preserve your teeth. That is not so. Brush your teeth, by all means, for the sake of cleanliness and hygiene and self-respect. But you'll never preserve your teeth that way. You'll never preserve your teeth except by eating the proper foods—foods that have in them minerals that will build teeth.

"And you must eat some raw food every day. Remember that. It may be a fruit or it may be a vegetable, but it must be raw. Even exclusively meat-eating races must have raw food. When I spent several months amongst the Eskimo I learned that. Except for a few berries in summer they have no food but meat. I learned something from that journey to Labrador and Greenland that the usual college education would not have taught me. I learned the absolute necessity of raw food.

"We like meat, and we like our meat cooked. That is all right if we eat some other raw food. But we usually eat the wrong kind of meat. We use muscle meat. Instead of steaks and chops and roasts of muscle meat we should eat more nonmuscle meat, more things like brains, hearts, livers, sweetbreads. They are the vital organs of an animal. One can live without an arm, a leg; one can live after some accident that has torn a great muscle from one's body. But one can't live without the brain, or heart, or liver—these vital organs. And they are vital to our meat supply, just as your own are vital to your life.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES. Evidence submitted by Dr. Levinne to prove that life-time food habits are ridiculous. It has never occurred to the above exhibits, he says, to eat each other.



DR. VICTOR E. LEVINNE, who advances some amazing theories about food.

"Don't think because you have milk that you have a raw food. Most milk is pasteurized. It has been cooked, as it were, to kill the germs. Well, that process has killed other things, too. The milk is no longer raw. Pasteurization was invented when the world was afraid of bacteria. We have found out that there are other things to be afraid of. One of them is an exclusive diet of cooked food.

"There is another commonly accepted rule about eating I want to speak of," Dr. Levinne continued. "That is the thing you have all been told: 'Chew your food well.' It doesn't mean anything. There was a craze for chewing food a few years ago. Gladstone, it was said, chewed each mouthful 40 times. Horace Fletcher was another. He insisted that food should be chewed about 70 times, if I remember. The only thing necessary is to cut up the food with the teeth so it can be swallowed. The rest is foolishness.

"Just as is the warning: Don't eat fast. It makes no difference in the value of your food how fast you eat. What does make a difference is that meal time is about the only time some of us have for social intercourse. It's a fine custom to linger over a meal, to visit, to enjoy our friends and our families while we eat. But so far as nutrition goes, slow or fast eating makes no difference. The value of the food is all there is to it."

"ONE THING to be afraid of is an exclusive diet of cooked food."

No wonder the students looked at the teachers and the teachers looked at the students as they heard this scientist playing havoc with the "school truths" they taught or had been taught.

And nobody, one suspects, enjoyed it more than Dr. Levinne. The professor of nutrition at Creighton University takes great delight in exploding what he calls the falsities that have passed for truth in schools. He is himself a graduate of Columbia University, and he studied nutrition with Prof. E. V. McCollum at Johns Hopkins. For seven years he has been professor of nutrition at Creighton University Medical School.

One feels certain, as one talks to him, that Victor Levinne would pay any price to get at the truth. That has been the rule in his investigations, in his refusal to accept as truth a statement for no reason other than that it has been taught as a fact. By scientific experiment he had sought facts. By the application of common sense to those facts he had developed his teaching.

Of medium height he is, his hair streaked with gray. (There is no hint of baldness; he doesn't believe in wearing a hat, and he believes the derby is the invention of the devil.) The brow is high and thoughtful, his face long, well modeled. Frank brown poetic eyes he has, a long nose which suggests a determination of purpose that is emphasized by the long upper lip and the long square-modeled jaw. His lips are full, well-modeled, but the line of the mouth is straight and purposeful.

And purpose is the keynote of his character. In the course of his investigations about five years ago he ran up against a snag. He knew that man needs raw food. He wondered how the Eskimo met the problem which we solve with fresh fruits, vegetables, salads. So he added the Eskimo tongue to his list of languages and in May, 1921, went up to Labrador, and later to Greenland, to live with the people and study their food customs. In December, 1921, he returned to his school duties. "I had learned things," he said, "that a college education would not teach.

"Do you remember two or three years ago, when, at the suggestion of Stefansson, four white men and an Eskimo woman started for Wrangel Island to take possession of it in the name of Canada? And do you remember the tragic story? Allan Crawford, 20, who led the party, was a student at the University of Toronto and the son of one of its professors. The other three men were E. Lorne Knight, 28; Frederick Maurer, and Milton Gale, aged 19. The woman was Ada Blackjack, and they had with them a cat, 'Vic.' Of that band only two remained alive after they were marooned on the island—the cat and the Eskimo woman. They were expert nutritionists. They ate raw meat—muscle cuts as well as viscera—and they came through. But Knight, the last to survive with them, would have none but cooked food. He hadn't lacked for courage in adventure, but his college education had failed to teach him what every illiterate Eskimo and every animal knows—that raw food is essential to life.

"EVEN exclusively meat-eating races must have raw food."

"WE KNOW that man, through civilization, has lost his keen sense of vision, smell, hearing and touch. He has also lost the instinct for the proper selection of food.

"Look at the animals. When one of them catches its prey, what is the first thing it does? It tears the victim open and eats the heart, the liver, possibly the brain—the vital organs. Those organs contain vitamines.

"What about the scavenger animals? They feed from the carcass after the vital organs are gone. But they feed on carrion. And in the decay of the muscle meat which is their meal, other vitamines have developed. That is why they can survive.

"Do you remember that in our zoos there was a time when 'animals would not live in captivity'? Do you know why? Because they were fed muscle meats. Now the keepers have discovered another food, liver. And we have no trouble keeping the meat eaters in captivity. They get their vitamines from the meat of a vital organ.

IN JAIL, Dr. Levinne spent six days behind the bars to find out what prisoners eat.

"The Eskimo first drinks the blood of the animal he has killed. Then he eats the vital organs. Instinct for him is a true nutritionist.

"But we others, when the industrial revolution began to make itself felt in relation to the food supply, had lost our instinct for the selection of natural food. We began without question or doubt to make use of foods that were industrialized, commercialized, demineralized, devitaminized, devitalized, colored, bleached, dyed, smoked, heated, boiled, cooked, fried, polished, extracted, concentrated, distilled, preserved, pickled, canned and refrigerated.

"Take the great American institution—the breakfast cereal. Now, if you want something to fill up your stomach so you will not feel the pangs of hunger, eat the usual breakfast cereal. You might as well eat sawdust or anything else with bulk. In but one cereal is there real nourishment—in whole cracked wheat.

"BUT we go on the theory that we are ill and must have some special food to make us strong again and we buy a commercialized food that has been robbed of virtually all its food value. There is a curious racial psychology in that. We build our thought on the idea that there is something wrong in years. We say 30 years old, or 40, or 50, as though years were a disgrace instead of the normal process of nature. We talk about the future as a possible 'rainy day,' as though there could not be happy days and days of sunshine in the future. And we plan our food as though we were sick folks instead of well.

"There are racial characteristics manifested in food. The Irish like potatoes, the Jews gefulte fish, the Italians macaroni, the Scotch oatmeal, the Mexicans chile con carne, the Japanese rice cakes. Our Southern people like cornmeal, but in the great war the French could not accustom themselves to eating cornmeal even under the pressure of lack of food.

"Certain cheeses require a special training—of mind, not stomach—before people can stomach them. Wines Spaniards like are not palatable to Italians, Italian wines strike horror to the Spaniard's taste. Beer is drunk everywhere in Europe, and in America wherever obtainable. Yet when beer was first introduced into Italy from Germany the question arose in Rome as to whether it was permissible to take beer on fast days. And the Italian prelates held that it was. Beer, to their unaccustomed taste, was a mortification of the flesh and therefore the drinking of beer a very proper Lenten exercise.

"Food is inextricably bound up with the physical and moral well-being of man. The Biblical record has it that a woman first induced man to eat and therefore ill fell upon the world. It doesn't say, but one suspects, that man took to drinking of his own accord."

It isn't when or how you eat—what you eat only makes the difference, according to Dr. Levinne. Calories are significant only so far. You eat so many calories, but you need life-giving vitamines and tonic minerals as well. Last September the professor of nutrition at Creighton University decided he wanted to know what sort of food was being fed to prisoners in jail in Omaha. He got himself arrested for speeding—though at the time of the alleged speeding he was dining at a club—and was sentenced to 10 days in jail, of which he served six. He found that the prisoners were fed plenty of calories—and that their food was poisonous insomuch as it lacked vitamines. There could be but one end to a life sustained by such diet—disease and death hurried by the lack of vital principles in the food. The result of his investigation was a changed diet, together with many other improvements in conditions at the Omaha City and the Douglas County jails in which he was incarcerated.

"Diet," he says simply, "must contain what the body needs if man is to remain healthy.

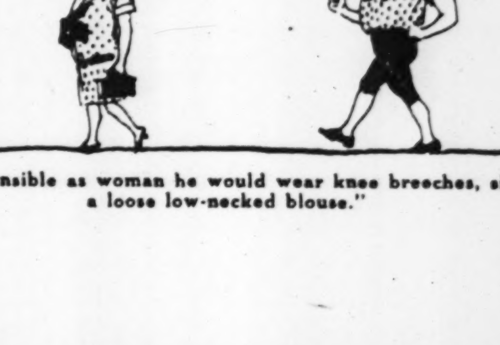
"AND what does the body need? There are organic foods and inorganic foods. The former—once living foods—are the proteins, the fats and the carbo-hydrates, as every schoolboy knows. These are the heating elements and body builders. They are the gasoline which makes us go," continued Dr. Levinne, "but you can't make a machine go without lubrication as well. The vitamines are the lubricators.

"Most of our major and minor ills can be traced to the fact that wrong food habits have deprived the body of some essential element, a body builder, a heat provider, a lubricator or a tonic.

"Or, it may be one thing more—just lack of sunshine—that causes the ill. The ultra-violet rays of sunlight are vitalizers, just as vitamines are. They energize our food. They energize our lives. Expose a bottle of olive oil to sunlight and it will have vitamines in it, whereas otherwise olive oil has none. We need sunshine just as plants and other animals need it. And our habit of clothes is as bad as our habits of food.

"The only people who dress scientifically today are the new-fashioned women. We can laugh all we please at the clothes of the girl we call the flapper. Her low-necked dress opens the throat to the sunlight, her loose garments do not bind the vital organs, her knee-length skirts and sleeveless or short-sleeved waists give all the more chance to life-giving sunlight. Her silk stockings and silk garments are scientifically correct. Wool and cotton keep out the ultra-violet rays of the sun. Silk lets them through. Every pore in the body needs air and sunlight, and the more we expose to them the better is our health.

"If man were as sensible as the woman whose fashions he laughs at he would wear today knee breeches, silk stockings and a loose low-necked blouse."



"IF MAN were as sensible as woman he would wear knee breeches, silk stockings and a loose low-necked blouse."

DRESSED FOR THE POLE. Matt Henson as he appeared at the time of his mad march across the ice and snow.

EXPLORER MATT HENSON at his desk today.

"The example and experience of Matthew Henson, who has been a member of each and all my Arctic expeditions since 1891, is only another one of the multiplying illustrations of the fact that race or color or bringing up or environment count nothing against a determined heart if it is backed and aided by intelligence." —ADMIRAL PEARY.

By FREDERICK H. BRENNAN
Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

NEW YORK. — The correspondence room of the Internal Revenue Collector's office on the second floor of the New York Custom House is one of the last places on earth where you would expect to find an Arctic explorer. It is not a scene of bold adventure. The five or six men who sit at desks in this brown high-windowed chamber handle incoming and outgoing mail. They are, to speak plainly, clerks, and unimportant clerks.

Matt Henson's desk is just to the left of the door. It is an oaken desk, rather battered. The forepart contains a number of pigeonholes, a pigeonhole for each office to which mail is to be delivered. Mail carriers push through the door at frequent intervals and toss letters onto the desk. Office boys come, also at frequent intervals, with more letters. It is Matt Henson's job to see that mail for the income tax division is placed in its proper pigeonhole; that letters dictated by Deputy Internal Revenue Collectors are properly stamped and made ready for the next outgoing mail; that special revenue tax blanks are placed in envelopes and dispatched to citizens on the mailing list. All day long, six days a week, Matt Henson sits there, just to the left of the door, and pokes letters into those pigeonholes, or stamps letters, or writes addresses.

ONCE in a great while Matt Henson is visited by other persons than mailmen and office boys. These come seeking not Matt Henson, the correspondence clerk, but Matt Henson, the famous Arctic explorer. Once in a great while someone remembers that Henson was not always a correspondence clerk. Infrequently it is recalled that this insignificant office drudge went with Admiral Peary to the North Pole. Some great adventurer who knew him 20 years ago mentions his name in an interview, or a controversy arises in the public prints as to some question concerning polar travel, and then an editor recollects: "Say, isn't Matt Henson still alive and somewhere in New York? He helped Peary discover the pole. He ought to know about this." So reporters get out the old clippings and hunt up Matt's new address and drop in to talk with him. Pitifully rare occurrences they are, though, and most of the time Matt Henson is forgotten.

The other day Donald B. MacMillan, who led the latest expedition to north polar regions, was talking over the radio about men and their achievements in the Arctic.

"Matt Henson," he said, "is the best dog team driver in the world. Peary considered him equaled only by a few veteran Eskimo hunters. Now Henson thinks"——

It was to discover what Henson thinks as he sits at his desk sorting letters that this reporter called at Room 205, Custom House. There was a great parade up Broadway that noon in honor of the Roosevelt's crew for their heroism in rescuing the men of the freighter Antinoe. Battery place held thousands and the steps of the Custom House looking up Broadway were jammed with the crowds. Bands were playing, on East River steamboat whistles made a din and as soldiers, sailors and marines swung into the chasm of lower Broadway there was cheering reminiscent of war days. Matt Henson had once been given such a welcome as this, when that other steamer, Roosevelt, returned from polar seas.

To him the hullabaloo in Broadway was just one more New York welcome, and he had been too busy, apparently, to join the throngs on the Custom House steps, for I found, upon reaching Room 205, that he had stepped out on an errand and would be back right away.

HE CAME in presently, a little Negro with graying hair and an almost clerical demeanor. He wore horn-rimmed spectacles without a black ribbon and a coat which did not match his baggy trousers. One pocket of the coat was torn at the corner. There was a shiny place at the right elbow and a corresponding shiny place on the top of the desk. A close-cropped mustache gave width and humor to his smile. He smiles a good deal, half-sheepishly, almost apologetically.

"Commander MacMillan said you were the best dog-team driver in the world," his visitor began, "and I came to get some pointers."

He chuckled at that and looked at the pile of letters lying on his desk to be sorted, and then, a bit apprehensively, at the boss of the correspondence room, who sat at a larger desk not far away, and then said in a low voice:

"Well, I guess he said that because I had about 20 years' experience; yes, sir. Ah', you know, with 20 years' experience, more or less, you get to know something about dogs."

He ducked his head in an embarrassed fashion, as if a hidden chapter in his life had been bared, a chapter which had no business being mentioned in the correspondence room, with all those letters to be sorted.

"Now, Mr. Henson, what is your method with dogs?"

It was to be an interview. He saw no way out of it, and looked about for a chair. But there were no extra chairs, so he stood with his caller, leaning against the desk.

"Well, dogs is peculiar. Mighty peculiar. You have to know how to handle them, I guess. Now, I used always to fool around with the dogs we had until I got to know them. The dogs we used up North were what they call huskies. They are either three-quarters wolf or half wolf. The three-quarter wolves travel faster, but they haven't the endurance. We used half-wolves, mostly.

"Those kind of dogs are always pretty wild. But I never had any trouble handling them. Some men say they club their dogs. I don't believe in it. I never clubbed a dog all the time I was up North. You know, I went up there with Mr. Peary five times. And the last time"——

"You found the pole."

"Yep."

He grinned again and, to cover his having betrayed himself so outrageously, began sorting the letters. He poked a few in separate pigeonholes and then went on:

"You wanted to know about dogs. Well, you see, an Eskimo dog is more wolf than anything else. He is pretty stupid and he knows only one thing: You've got to do your share of the work. Now, supposing you are out with the team and climbing a pressure ridge in the ice"—he took two letters and put them edgeways on the desk to illustrate the hummock—"if you don't do your share of pushing on the sledge the king dog soon knows it. He'll stop, and when he stops the whole team will stop. Well, sir, he'll just turn around and look at you. Perhaps he'll bare his teeth. If he does that it means that he's figurin' on coming back down where you are. And if he does all the other dogs will come with him. So you have to work fast.

"I USED to carry a whip. It would reach"—he looked about for an illustration and pointed to another correspondence clerk's desk—"it would reach from here to that desk. Well, in a case like this I'd always throw out this whip and hit the king dog lightly. Then I'd shove hard on the sledge handles. The dogs would get the idea then and not make any more trouble.

"But you've got to know how to treat them. You can't club an Eskimo dog and break his spirit. He'll just lie down and take the clubbing, but he'll be meaner when you stop. They are mean-tempered dogs, the ones we used to have were, anyway, and if a dog gets mad you must handle him prompt and proper. The best way is to grab him by the collar, double up your whip and larrup him good. Then put him back in the team.

"A lot of these explorers nowadays don't treat their dogs right. A dog should have one pound of pemmican every day. Pemmican comes in 10-pound tins and we used to divide a tin among a 10-dog team every day. If a dog gets tired and weak he should be taken from the team and fed separately. If he doesn't pick up, the best thing to do is to kill him and feed him to the other dogs. That is, unless you need to eat him yourself. I remember"——

A mailman came in at this juncture and tossed down several letters. Henson reached into a pigeonhole, pulled out several others and handed them to him.

"I REMEMBER," he went on, "that one time we started across Greenland with 10 dogs. Our grub ran out and we had to eat the dogs. We were down to one dog before we made our cache and we went for two days without food because we needed that dog to find the trail for us."

He instructed the reporter, if the reporter should ever drive a dog team, not to leave the dogs unmuzzled at night.

"They'll eat their traces and then fight the other dogs. Then they'll raid the camp. I've seen a team of dogs get loose and rip open tin pemmican cans with their teeth and eat up everything fit to eat in camp. Many an expedition's camp has been wrecked by dogs that broke loose."

The reporter mentioned Balto and Grettir Larsen and the race with the antitoxin to Nome.

"Well, that was pretty good work," said Henson, "but it wasn't fast time, you know. I once drove a team 160 miles in 18 hours. It wasn't so cold in Alaska when that trip was made, was it? Something like 15 below zero, wasn't it? Up North we had to travel with it 50 below, and sometimes as low as 70 below. But it was a pretty run at that, because Larsen couldn't see the trail. Funny thing about Arctic trails: You can follow them better when a blizzard is blowing than when it's just a gentle snowfall. That's because the wind blows the snow out of the tracks and the dogs can follow them better."

When was the last time he was interviewed?

"The newspaper boys came to see me when those fellows tried to fly to the pole," he said, "and I told them I didn't think airplanes would ever do it. You know, all the ice around the pole—that is, when I was there, it may have changed a bit now—is very rough. It's hummocked so badly that if an airplane was to land it would never take off again. Dogs are the only way to get to the pole, I think.'"

Was he ever interviewed after that?

"Yes, the newspaper boys came around a while ago when there was talk of finding a lost continent north of Alaska. I told them I would eat any land they found north of 88 degrees. You see, I've been across that ice and they haven't. The ice drifts too much to be landlocked. If there was land in that region it would hold the ice in. I remember that on our fourth trip Mr. Peary and I drifted 80 miles in three days. There's nothing but water around the pole. Leastways I'm pretty sure there isn't."

He wasn't setting up as an expert, he wanted to make clear. He just didn't think, from what he remembered of the North Pole, that they'd find any continent worth while north of Alaska, Lieutenant Leigh Wade and the bolsheviks to the contrary.

So the talk swung around to that famous dash for the pole. How had he come to be with Peary, anyway?

"WELL, I followed the sea, boy and man, for 30 years. I ran off from home in Maryland when I was 9 years old. I shipped as a cabin boy and lied to Captain Whitehead that I was 12 years old"—he laughed at the recollection. "Well, I shipped on a lot of boats. I visited mighty near every port in the world, I guess. I jumped ship at Sydney, Australia, once and spent six months in the woods. Got another ship and went everywhere. Then I came back to New York and went to work in a hat store. The owner was a friend of Mr. Peary's. He used to come in and talk to my boss.

"One day Mr. Peary said he was leaving for Nicaragua to help build a canal. He was looking for a good man to take along as his personal servant. I said I'd like to go. My boss gave me a good recommendation and so I joined up. Mr. Peary was a Commander then, I think, but they made him an Admiral later on, you know.

"Well, I just went along with him, and when he decided to try to find the North Pole he took me with him. I first joined him in 1891 and made five trips to the North with him. The first three trips he didn't have much money, so I worked for my board. I bought my own clothes and other equipment. The last two trips he paid for my equipment, but I didn't draw any pay. I never got a cent out of that work, and when I reached New York after it was all over I was broke."

ANOTHER mailman came in just then and two clerks who had business to discuss with Henson. Some letter which ought to have been sent to the Collector's office had been sent to the Narcotics Bureau by mistake, and would he trace it?

"Tell about the discovery of the pole," his visitor requested, when the missing letter had been checked up.

"Well, that's all been printed before," he protested. The mail on his desk was accumulating and he didn't know how much of the Government's time he really ought to take to tell about his past. The Government hadn't hired him to tell reporters about his past. So the interviewer said he would read the story Henson had told years ago. To make the record straight, here it is, parenthetically:

"We left Captain Bartlett and party at the eighty-eighth parallel, which was, we figured, 132 miles from the pole. Admiral Peary and I and four Eskimos, E-Ging-Wah, O-Tah, See Gloo and O-Kee-Ah, with five dog teams, were to make the final dash. We had five sledges, each drawn by eight dogs hitched abreast, the traces (ordinary window cord) being about 15 feet long. Each of the Eskimos drove a team and I took the fifth.

"On April 7, about 10:30 a. m., after we had been traveling for five days, and sleeping not more than four hours in each 24, the Commander (Peary) ordered a snow shield built to protect him from the flying drift of surface snow. I knew he was about to take observations and I was nervous. It was a few minutes before noon when I handed him the pan of mercury. He lay flat on his stomach and as he took the elevation he made notes on tissue paper lying at his head.

"I knew by the way he squared his jaw that he was satisfied. We were at the pole. I rushed up and held out an ungloved hand to congratulate him. Just then the wind blew something in his eyes and he turned his face aside. The Commander then slept for four hours and made more observations. We stayed at the pole about 35 hours and the temperature was about 35 degrees below zero. We were worried about the ice opening and shutting off our way back. So, after laying a flag on a cake of ice and burying a tin tube with brief records, we began the march back to our camp."

Thinking over this story the reporter asked Matt Henson why he quit exploring and took a job in the Custom House. He laughed and fiddled the edge of a letter.

"WELL," he said, after some hesitation, "enough is enough. I hadn't laid anything by during those trips to the North. I thought it was time to get me a job and take care of my family. So I came back to New York and after several clerical jobs at other places I got this position nine years ago."

"Did it pay?"

"What? The exploring?"

"Yes."

"No, it didn't. I'd be a lot better off if I hadn't gone. Still and all, I don't know. I'm the only black man that ever went so far north. I reckon that those Eskimos are all dead now, so I'm the only man alive that ever stood at the North Pole."

He had married before starting on the polar ventures and has two grown sons. He and his wife live in the Bronx now, and occasionally he does a little lecturing. He has kept some of the trophies collected in the North, but most he gave away to friends.

"You know," he added as an afterthought, "when a man gets to be 59—I'll be 60 in August—it's time for him to settle down. I've had offers to drive dog teams for other explorers, but there isn't much more to explore. The South Pole was found by the time I got back to the United States, and aside from scientific work in the polar regions there isn't any new place to go. . . ."

He shoved a handful of letters in the outgoing mail pigeonhole.

"I forgot to tell you about my boys. They can't seem to settle down after the war. They don't do anything but drift from one job to another. But they never drift very far. They go to Brooklyn or Perth Amboy or Rahway or Hoboken. Sometimes I tell them: 'Why don't you go some place while you're going?' But they don't want to go far from New York. . . . Well, I went pretty far, and maybe they're right. I haven't got so much to show for it."

And he stamped a letter bound for East Thirty-first street.

IN THE LAST YEAR OF INSOBRIETY, 1918, LOVE SUFFUSED HER.

Alma Rubens, the dark-eyed girl who is the heroine of this film, had left San Francisco and had proceeded to Hollywood, same State but different reputation, where she had made a hit in the great business industry of the West Coast. But making a hit evidently did not satisfy her, she was willing to get married, though she should have known that might lead to another hit. When we first see her she is in that weakened condition when she might catch anything, such as love.

HE COMES INTO HER LIFE.

In the studios of Hollywood cavorts Franklin Farnum, a handsome devil. His resistance, too, is lowered. He might fall in love. But there is a dark past in his career. His real name is Bill Smith, but his reel name is Franklin Farnum.

THEIR LIVES MIGHT HAVE BEEN DIFFERENT

if he had kept his real name, but as he had changed it, it made it possible for Alma to fall in love with him.

SHE DID

and he not having any right to an inferiority complex with a name like Franklin Farnum, love came his way too, when he saw her, and

HE TOLD HER OF HIS LOVE.

And Alma Rubens, thinking that it was very nice of him and undoubtedly believing he showed awfully good taste, which he undoubtedly did (see pictures on this page), told him it was all right with her and LOVE BLOOMED LIKE A GLORIOUS SUNSET.

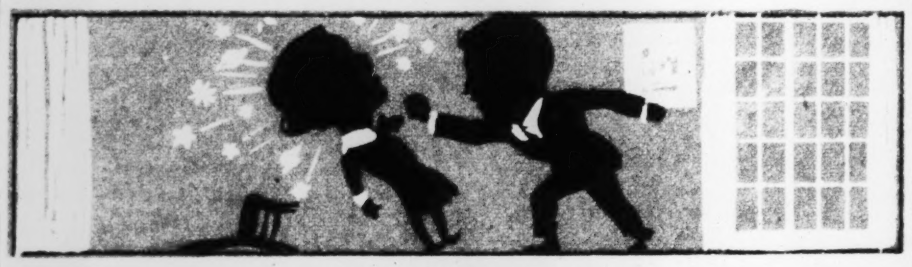
For, from now on, she would be Mrs. Franklin Farnum and gay romance was in the air.

CAME DAWN

and they were married, but in every life there is a bend in the road. For they had hardly started on their honeymoon, in fact it was but the day after their marriage, when



"HE STRUCK ME,"

Alma said. Just why, nobody knows. Perhaps she might have forgot and introduced him to someone as "Mr. Smith" or called him "Bill" in their lovers' sanctuary, but anyhow she proceeded to pack her dresses and her wedding things and

SHE WALKED OUT INTO THE WORLD ALONE.

For a whole week she trod the unlit paths of spinsterhood and then came

RECONCILIATION,

but not for long. The first day of their reconciliation

"HE KNOCKED ME UNCONSCIOUS,"

Alma cried to the world, and though they lived together for a month, during which time Miss Rubens announced "he continued to beat me," marriage between them was not to be, and, going to all the trouble of packing her things, again and before long, as romance died, she got a divorce.

SHE WALKED OUT INTO THE WORLD ALONE,

FOR FIVE LONG YEARS

she went her way alone. Making thousands glad while in her own breast was an ache in her heart. Acting in romance after romance, play romances but no true romance in her life. Spending all day lavishing affection on some hero of the screen, and being betrothed to him ere the film curled up for the end, only to wander away from the studio as much alone as when she had entered it. And then she came to know Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, sometime of St. Louis, and

HE CAME INTO HER LIFE.

Close-up of second husband—Dr. Goodman of St. Louis.

REEL II.

Dr. Goodman had studied medicine at Washington University and then abroad, and had returned to St. Louis to practice his profession, living at the Buckingham Hotel and having his office in the Century Building. But in 1912 he went where he began writing, and was so successful that efforts were made to suppress one of his novels, and a critic said of another novel that therein Dr. Goodman had "out-Elinored Elinor Glyn," which was no small feat. Still another, and his third, novel, Dr. Goodman dedicated to Alma Rubens. It was called and it is the story of a fellow who was continually getting married or continually falling in love but never finding satisfaction, and the quoted line that precedes the novel is "Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds." And at one place in the book Dr. Goodman said of his hero, "The real reason for his unhappiness from his youth on was simply because of his blind and constant idealistic search for physical and material beauty and an entire ignoring of the true question of life—spiritual and mental companionship." And in another place the hero says, "It's the old problem about marriage. The very happiness that you try to get by marriage is shut off by making it legal. The wedding ring is the iron prison of love.' And love can't be imprisoned." And the Doctor goes on to say in still another place, "And she began making certain demands of him. Such unwise demands as the wife makes of her husband." But Alma married him anyhow, for she loved him, and the Doctor,

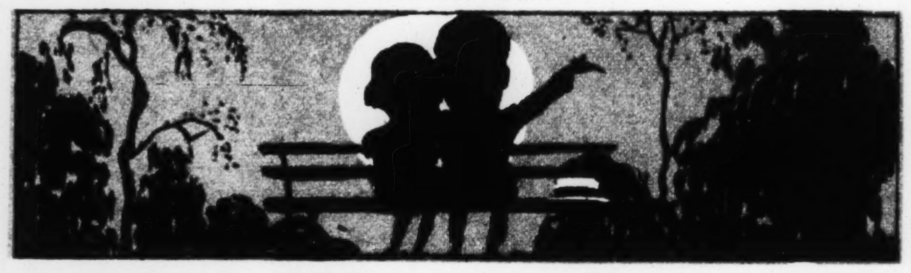
HE LOVED HER.



Nor was he only a novelist; now he was writing for the movies and had become executive head of Cosmopolitan Films. To make their marriage more romantic, the ex-physician was producing a picture in the East, a picture in which Alma Rubens was starring, when they were married at Greenwich, Connecticut, in August 1923. And immediately they started for Scroon Lake, there to spend their honeymoon.

FAR FROM THE NOISY CITY

to a lake. A lake with boats on it. And moonlight nights on the lake.

CAME THE DAWN,

and love again. But in every life there is a bend in the road. In some lives, two bends. For the honeymoon, despite the lake and the boats and the moonlit nights, was interrupted, because, she said,

"HE HIT HER ON THE NOSE

until the blood flowed" from that organ which looks on the screen like a perfectly formed object that should not be tampered with. And they departed for New York and in took up their residence at Hotel Plaza, where women attired in the resplendent gowns of riches, in strings of pearls and with gay smiles and laughter, little thinking of the tribulations of this harassed world, sit at tables and talk to men who are not ashamed to drink tea. And in their suite in such an hotel as this, Miss Rubens, our heroine, in a sworn statement, said that Dr. Goodman and "struck her so ably that she needed the services of a physician, and Dr. Goodman did not offer his, and she was forced to obtain another doctor." Then CAME CHRISTMAS.

THE CITY OF BROKEN HEARTS

"STRUCK ME"

It was Christmas morning. It is related an argument was engendered over the question of attending church. And she said and used language that was not the height of propriety nor entirely fitted to Christmas morning." And and she packed her clothes again, a procedure which by this time Miss Rubens must have become quite adept at, and started off for Hollywood. Dr. Goodman remained in New York. So she was out of range.

"HE STRUCK HER AGAIN

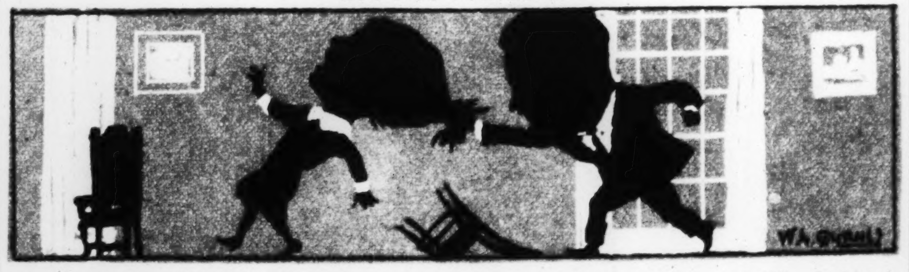
BUT NOT FOR LONG



if what she said is so. For he later journeyed to the Cinema City, and Miss Rubens' mother said, "He pulled her hair and slapped her. I asked him to get out. He wasn't supporting her or paying for the house, anyway." Romance died and she got a divorce.

AGAIN SHE WAS ALONE and perhaps she mused in her heart's soreness over that passage appearing on Page 329 of the novel her second and past husband had written and dedicated to her, to wit, "After all, he saw, it was only the woman who herself underwent the hard knocks of the world that understood."

THIS WOMAN'S HUSBAND, or, rather, her ex-husband, didn't, however, admit he had ever harmed Alma's nose. Instead he issued a statement wherein he declared, "Either Miss Rubens or her attorneys are dreadfully muddled. I have been very busy and only occasionally have seen her. So, if she suffered from pugilistic complications, it must have been at the hands of some other sparring partner. Of course, there is nothing for me to do but to vigorously contest the case, as I do not intend to be knocked out on a technicality.

TRUTH WILL OUT

at the trial, I suppose, and possibly it will be revealed that Miss Rubens herself is no tyro at fisticuffs. I am now placed in the position of being forced to submit all the pugilistic statistics concerning Miss Rubens. I know there are better men than I am, Gunga Din." He didn't appear at the trial, and she was

FREE AGAIN.

For several long days she went her way alone. And then she met

REEL III.

Close-up of hero—RICARDO CORTEZ.

RICARDO CORTEZ.

He was from Spain, so it is said; in his veins boiled the hot blood of OLD CASTILE.

He was the romantic type, chivalrous, handsome. He did not look like he would BEAT A WOMAN.

And a few days more than two months after our heroine had been divorced from Dr. Goodman, she confided to some of her friends that she was engaged to Ricardo Cortez of Old Spain. Cortez said so, too. But for a while at least, for Miss Rubens' divorce decree read that she couldn't get married again until one year had elapsed after her last divorce. So during all last summer,

SECRETLY

THE SPRING OF THEIR AFFECTIONS,

our heroine and her new hero were constantly seen with each other. And all last autumn, which was still they were always together. They danced together, they dined together, they laughed and talked and talked and laughed together. And one day someone presented her with three wild ducks. Mr. Cortez was invited for dinner.

THE SPRING OF THEIR AFFECTIONS,

"PLATES FOR TWO,"

our heroine told her cook, Leonia Frucht. Leonia cooked the three ducks. She served one to Miss Rubens, one to Ricardo, but she—

SHE ATE THE THIRD.

And Cortez was still hungry. Our heroine told the cook to bring on the third for Senor Cortez. But that was quite impossible. And Miss Rubens became angry. True, she had divorced two men. Because those men, she felt, hadn't treated her as they should. But those two men had nothing to do with Ricardo Cortez. He was now. She would protect him. She would see that he was given that which was his right—or what his appetite demanded. She immediately discharged the cook. Just on account of a duck. Discharged. Absolutely. Perhaps

LOVE DRIVES ONE TO SUCH DEEDS.

Then came the twenty-eighth of this January, and the year was up. But

THEY PLAYED SAFE

and waited until January 30, and then Alma and Ricardo drove to the nearby place of Riverside and there

THEY WERE MARRIED.

But the District Attorney said they weren't married. For, it seems, our heroine's attorney had failed to enter the divorce records on the day the decree was granted; they were not entered until February 6, 1925, which meant that Alma could not get married until February 6, 1926. And so on February 8 they giving the law two days' grace, and so with the blessings of the law to these two

CAME THE DAWN.

And they started out to live happily ever afterwards

BUT WHO CAN TELL?

Only time, as the saying goes. So we leave them as they are pictured below——

FADE - OUT.

Ricardo and Alma register bliss.

THE END.

GHOST!

A Personal Investigation of the "Invisible Spook" Which Is Reputed to Haunt the Uecker Home in Hustisford, Wisconsin.

By GUY FORSHEY

Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

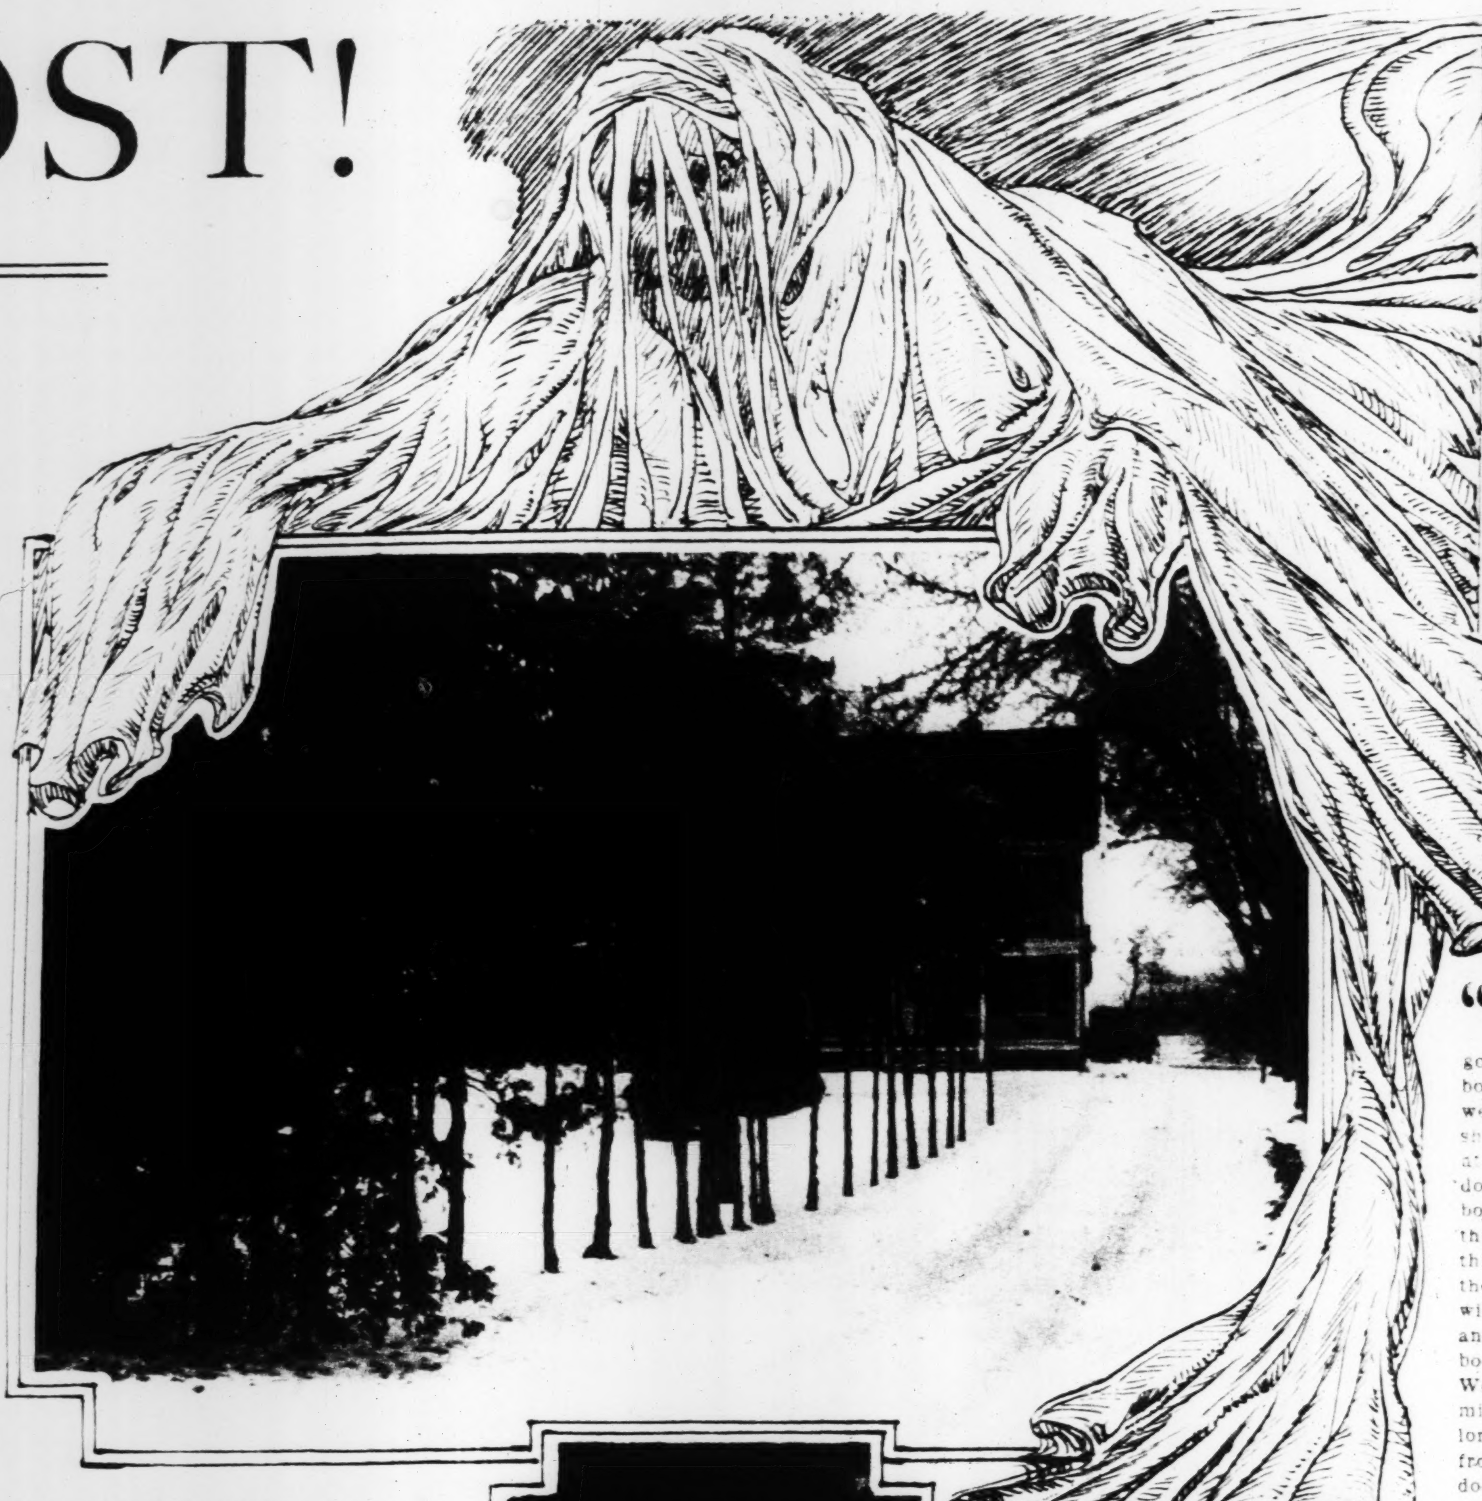
HUSTISFORD, Wisconsin.—Fir trees, dark and ominous, loom before the picturesque farm home of Robert Uecker, three miles southwest of here, screening it from the road and the eyes of inquisitive travelers who pass. Across the rolling hills of Dodge County that dense grove can be seen for miles, a great black-green spot upon a field of snow, and from afar the dairy farmers driving into Hustisford with their milk cans point to it as a landmark that designates the scene of eerie operations. The Uecker farm, it happens, is the habitat of a most malevolent and profane spook. Strange and terrifying are the deeds performed back of that forbidding wall of balsams.

Far from contenting itself with mere midnight stalking and such other mild activities as are traditional in ghostly behavior, this incorrigible haunt disports itself in broad daylight as well as in the shadows of late hours. Sunshine and the presence of human beings, credulous or skeptical, are not barriers to its visitations. On occasion it will even perform for visitors—invisibly, of course—and almost daily it sends the Uecker family into paroxysms of unbridled terror. Rocks and oil cans are sometimes hurled about the dairy barn and members of the household reviled in obscene messages penciled on the walls. The tails of cattle are bobbed in latest ponjola style. Now and then the spook absconds with a barn door or a vital piece of farm machinery, to return it later under circumstances most unusual. Once, they say, it caused a 50-gallon tank of gasoline to freeze solid and then thaw out almost instantaneously. Periodically it keeps the countryside gasping over the invectives and threats of violence hurled indiscriminately in rambling and incoherent letters. No second-rate blasphemer is this unseen denizen of the fir grove. He is an oracle of profanity. That is one reason for jumping to the conclusion that he is a "he." Certainly no female spook could parade such a vile vocabulary.

FOR NEARLY a year the "Hustisford Ghost" has been rampant. And the more energetically the Uecker family tries to find out who he is and what he wants, the more rampant he becomes. Even if A. P. Roberts, the Milwaukee spiritualist, did visit the place recently and collect $200 for casting a spell, the interloper still makes his presence known and undesirable. He does this mostly by letters now, and the family attributes that to the fact that Roberts' spell keeps him off the place and permits him to approach no closer than the mail box just outside the fir thicket. However, there is no telling when a $200 spell may run out, so the family isn't taking chances. The lengthening shadows of late afternoon invariably find them on vigilant guard. Those letters, between vulgarities, have spoken of murder and fire and blood, and although the Ueckers place implicit confidence in the illiterate spiritualist's power, they want to be prepared for anything in case that protection is withdrawn or the spell expires without notice.

Just what, or rather who, it is that is keeping the farm in such a furore and the conversationalists so busy is a matter upon which opinion is divided. About the only point upon which the harassed family and their neighbors agree is that the disturber is not the ghost of a dead man. No, indeed! He is very much alive. Most of Hustisford's population will tell the inquirer with ready conviction that there is no ghost at all, dead or alive, and that somebody in or close to the Uecker family is responsible for the phenomena. They hesitate to mention names because the letter writer on several occasions has mentioned the matter of burning the town, but they let it be known where their suspicions lie. At any rate they take no stock in stories about mischief being performed by supernatural hands.

But just try to tell the Uecker family the manifestations are produced by natural agencies and see what happens! The writer tried it when he visited the farm to find out just why it was that a spook should pick out this particular spot as the scene of his gambols. It proved to be a futile endeavor. Would the Ueckers believe that a man of ordinary flesh and blood and perhaps less than ordinary intelligence was performing those tricks? No sir! They knew it wasn't the ghost of a dead man. Roberts had told them that. But they were sure that supernatural agencies were involved. Somebody was under the power of a witch and, being able to enter or to leave his physical body at will, was prowling about the place in astral form, listening in on family conversations and raising hell generally, just to annoy and terrify them. Oh, yes; they even knew who it was. The spiritualist had told them that, too. It was that fellow who lives down the road there. His own mother was a witch anyway, they declared, and she could make him visible or invisible as she chose. No telling what he would be up to now if it weren't for Roberts' spell. Witches, you know, can't do any devilment when a spell is put on them. Thus the Uecker family talked.



"THE HAUNTED HOUSE"—behind the black trees lurks (so they say) the Hustisford ghost.

IF THERE was about that "haunted" farm anything that seemed really astonishing to the visitor it certainly was not the reported proximity of a witch or the doings of a mischievous disembodied spirit. It was the appalling fact that a homestead so modern outwardly could exhale an atmosphere so suggestive of medieval peasantry—serious talk of witches and magic spells in an up-to-date home that boasted water and lighting systems, hardwood floors throughout and an elaborate radio set; belief in spooks flourishing on a model twentieth century farm alongside herds of blooded Holsteins which enjoyed the latest dairy barn accommodations prescribed by the agricultural colleges. It was incongruous, but it was a fact. The Ueckers were certain that witchcraft was at the bottom of their troubles and the head of the house, a grizzled dairyman of 66, argued the point until his voice rose high and shrill above the sputtering of the radio.

The men folk of the place were hard at work storing a summer's supply of ice in one of the big concrete silos when the writer arrived by flivver from Hustisford and penetrated that fir thicket to the house. Somehow word of his errand quickly reached the ice cutters and within five minutes the entire family had assembled to tell of their strange adventures. Especially eager and voluble seemed the two grown sons, Oscar and Edgar; suspiciously so, in fact. They were exhibiting no little delight at the way the net appeared to be tightening about the neighbor. Hattie, a daughter, and Evelyn, a 12-year-old granddaughter, were less garrulous, but they rallied to the occasion as prompters now and then, as did Mrs. Uecker, and all collaborated in extracting from bureau drawers and cabinets a vast assortment of scurrilous notes. The elder Uecker, taking precedence as spokesman, told his story first.

What had led him to believe that his neighbor was responsible?

Well, about a year ago, somebody had broken into his granary and stolen some oats. He had suspected the neighbor, and, armed with a search warrant, had ransacked the latter's premises. It had been an ill-advised move. Not only had he failed to find the stolen oats, but he had incurred the neighbor's enmity and that had been doubly unfortunate for the house of Uecker because the neighbor was in league with evil powers, his own mother being a witch.

What a remarkable neighbor! But how did Uecker know all this?

WELL, he hadn't known it at first, but after the strange things began to happen he had suspected his fellow farmer, there being no one else to suspect, and he had then consulted the Milwaukee spiritualist. That had clinched the case so far as he was concerned. Why hadn't he complained to the authorities or hired a detective? Oh, he did report it to the Sheriff, but the officer hadn't paid much attention to him. And anyway he didn't consider it a case for a mere sheriff. The supernatural was involved. Only spiritualists could deal with spooks and witches.

Had Roberts told him that, too?

Yes.

It began to appear that the spiritualist had worked more mischief on the place than the spook. Previous inquiry among business men of Hustisford had brought to light information that the neighbor in question was decidedly above stealing oats as he was above dabbling in witchcraft and was deeply worried by Uecker's whispered charges. He had lived in the community for eight years and was well thought of by everybody except the Uecker family. It seemed from the beginning that Uecker was on the wrong track. But let him tell his story.

When had the ghostly manifestations begun?

"It was silo filling time last fall," the dairy farmer related, "and we were starting to cut corn when this neighbor hired a lawyer to sue us for accusing him of stealing oats. The lawyer wanted us to come to his office and talk over a settlement, but we were busy and didn't go. Right away after that things began to happen. First the kingbolt was taken out of a wagon so that when we started to drive it away it fell apart. Then the nuts were taken off the wheels so they would drop off without warning. It might have caused a bad accident, but we found it in time. Later we found the kingbolt planted in a row of corn where the sickle of the corn binder would hit it. Pretty soon a sprocket was missing from the binder and it was found in a bundle of corn all ready to be fed into the silo shredder. It would have broken the shredder and tied up the work."

WHO HAD found this iron sprocket in the corn bundle just in time to save the shredder?

"Eddie, my youngest boy."

Who had found the missing kingbolt and the hub nuts in time to prevent an accident?

"Eddie and Oscar."

What happened next?

"Well, Reinhold Schmidt found a lot of paris green in the chicken feed. Schmidt is my son-in-law. He lives up the road on the next farm. We found then that the poison was some that we had kept in a cupboard in the barn here. The spook had stolen it and mixed it with Reinhold's oats."

Had any chickens been poisoned?

No, Reinhold had found the stuff was poisoned before he fed them.

The visitor remarked that poisoning of chicken feed and displacement of wagon parts didn't seem particularly ghostly. Weren't there any evidences of a real spook's work? Oh, yes. A lot of them. Uecker was just coming to them.

"You can never tell me that it wasn't somebody with a witch's power that stole that shed door a while back," he continued. "You see he took it one night and left a diagram on the wall telling us where to find it. We looked and couldn't find it. About two days later my brother-in-law, Hermann Bergmann, came out and he found it right where the spook had said it was, leaning against another shed a few yards away from where it was stolen. We had been passing right by it and not seeing it because the spook had made it invisible.

"Then there was a lot of other mischief done. Our cellar keys were stolen, the gas was turned on in the kitchen so there would be an explosion when we tried to light the range, and one morning the boys tried to start the gasoline engine to pump water and found the 50-gallon tank of gasoline had frozen solid. We thought the oil man had sold us water and sent for him to come out and look at the ice, but when he got here it had thawed out again and was gasoline.

"THE QUEEREST thing, though," the narrator went on, "was the way this bewitched fellow got in the dairy barn in his invisible body and threw things around while we were right there. That happened only a short time ago. Eddie and I were milking at the time and we had the door and windows closed and fastened on the inside. Nobody could have got in or thrown anything in from the outside. Well, the first thing we knew we heard a great thump on the door as if somebody was pounding it with a hammer. We threw open the door and looked everywhere but there was nobody in sight and it was bright moonlight. We went back to the milking and in a minute or two a big iron bolt over a foot long was thrown across the barn. It came from the direction of the door, but the door was closed."

Where had Eddie been at this time and where was his father?

"I was busy milking about 15 or 20 feet from the door," Uecker explained, "and Eddie was milking the cow nearest the door. I remember that well because his cow had got scared and nearly kicked him over when that blow was struck on the board just behind him."

Well, since Eddie was sitting so near the door, hadn't he seen where the bolt came from? No, he hadn't seen anything because the thrower was invisible.

Wasn't it possible that Eddie was playing a prank on him and had struck the door with the bolt from the inside and then, a moment later, hurled it across the barn?

No, it couldn't have been Eddie. It was the spook; that's what it was. Why, on that same evening the spook threw a can of insect powder at Eddie and spilled it all over him while he sat there on a milking stool. This time it had seemed to come from the direction of a window, or at least the can of powder had been kept on the window ledge. An oil can was in that window, too, and pretty soon it had hopped off and fallen on the floor; then a rock as big as your two fists had seemed to drop down out of the plank ceiling right behind the milkers.

"I KNOW nobody but an invisible person could have done this and a lot of other things that were done," Uecker declared. "The other day two bridles were cut in pieces while the boys and I were at work in the barn. We were not 20 feet from where they hung. And the same day the boys found the sleeves of their coats were ripped all the way down. These were coats they wore when at work outside and had left hanging in the barn. This spook just came along and ripped them while we were standing there. Not long after that he bobbed the tails of four heifers while we were just a few feet away."

Had Eddie been present when the tails of the heifers were bobbed?

Yes, he had been around somewhere.

The visitor, intrigued by this report of violence, accompanied his host to the barn expecting to see evidence of cruelty to animals but was relieved to find the job had been one of barbering rather than surgery and that the heifers hadn't suffered discomfort. The bobbed switches lay on a shelf in the barn as exhibit A in the case of Uecker vs. Spook. And there was another exhibit even more startling from advance reports.

"You fellows talk about finger prints," Uecker had said to me. "I want to show you some real finger prints on a broom that the spook broke the other day. He left the marks of five claws where he gripped it. Look here—"

The investigator looked. What he saw was five grooves which had been clumsily carved on the handle with a pocket knife with the thumb mark on the same side as those of the fingers. This spook business was getting a bit rank.

It got still more rank, however, when activities turned to examination of that pack of letters. There were at least two dozen of them, all scrawled half legibly with a lead pencil on small sheets of tablet paper. Some were brief notes with no intelligible meaning. Others were more or less lengthy missives setting forth threats of fire and murder or offering to "settle" for the damage done by the ghost. Most of them were hideously obscene. Some were signed with the name of the Lutheran minister at Hustisford. Some bore the name of the neighboring farmer or were simply signed "Spuke" or "Invisible Ghost." One bearing the neighbor's name was brought in from the mail box by the boys while the writer was at the house. It was in a sealed envelope and bore a two-cent stamp, but the stamp hadn't been canceled. Evidently it hadn't come through the postoffice, a fact which seemed to be of some significance when coupled with the note's arrival just at the time when letters were under excited discussion.

ONE OF the more intelligible and less profane of the missives read as follows:

"Days are coming blood will flow. We no you are going to watch us with helpers. We have a gang of six. Yous canot capture us. We have a person witch tells us what yous are doing at all times. You then kill one of us we will capture you torcher you and demolish yous entirely. The leader of us is a person which you cant shoot above the hips. As soon as you see him you are nerveless and you will be killed. Roberts power is taken-away. He will be killed by Jan. 1. Wensday and friday blood will flow."

It seemed from this that not one spook but a whole gang of them was at work. Other letters offering to "settle" for sums ranging from $5000 to $20,000 also indicated by initials attached that more than one person was accepting responsibility for the disturbances. However, it was obvious that names signed to those letters meant nothing. The author had been habitually careless about the identity of his supposed "accomplices." The offers to "settle" were interpreted by Uecker to mean that the spook was getting alarmed over his action in sending obscene matter through the mails and wanted to buy his way out of the mess. But Uecker was getting small comfort out of the fact that he had the disturber on the run. He wouldn't think of accepting money. What would be the use? It would be bewitched and would be sure to disappear just about the time he tried to lay hands on it. No, a settlement wouldn't do any good. Uecker wanted a confession of guilt made in person, and this, it seemed, the spook was unwilling to make. Sometimes, it appeared, the spook was driven almost to desperation.

"YOU CRULE creaters on earth have worried us almost to death," one reproachful missive read. "Before we will come to your house and admit we are guilty we will die. You have to stop this or we will get another witchkraft and torcher you for awhile." Another appealed for pity and then concluded with a line of vulgarity that would make a pirate blush.

After looking over the situation at the "bewitched" farm, it is a little difficult to understand why Uecker should go so far as a quarter of a mile from home to look for the guilty party in the household of his inoffensive neighbor. But Uecker cannot be turned from his conviction. The more letters he gets the more certain he appears to become that the other farmer is the author and has been spying about in an invisible body and eavesdropping at the Uecker fireside.

"How else," he demands, "could anybody know just what we talk about around the supper table? Look at these letters. One of them shows this fellow knew we were going to hire Roberts before we had told anybody, and others tell the next day about things we talked over the night before. The man that wrote these letters certainly was here in the house and if he was here he was invisible."

That was all very well, but just who had been visible in the house when those matters were discussed?

"Only the family."

Were Oscar and Eddie there?

Yes, of course, but what did that have to do with it? They hadn't told the neighbor anything.

At this point the visitor departed. What was the use? After all, he was only a reporter and not a detective.

SHINGLE BOB

By McCready Huston

From Being the Favorite Barber of Jonesville's Society Women, and a Potential Playwright, H. George Chadwick Was to Learn How Suddenly Disaster May Overtake One.

THE women had taken to the barber shop in the basement of the Hotel New Trianon as they had taken to knickerbockers at the Jonesville Country Club. One day no woman, unless she led a child to a chair, was ever seen in the shop. The next day no woman with short hair was ever seen having her hair cared for anywhere else, and those who had worked themselves up to the point of having their hair bobbed knew it was bad form to go anywhere but to the New Trianon.

It had been whispered, in the right place at the right time and by the right person, that the distinguished-looking barber at the sixth chair could give a better shingle than one could get in Chicago. And Number Six was no other than H. George Chadwick. . . . If you had entered the shop any day last year, you would not have noticed him. He would have stood at attention in his crisp duck suit, exactly like the nine other barbers. If you had chosen his chair he would have shaved you or trimmed your hair or massaged your face quickly and satisfactorily, giving you the standard, near metropolitan service in so many motions. He had the air of detachment that had become the rule since the hotel quit calling itself the Smith House and became the New Trianon. He was the counterpart of a thousand barbers in a hundred shops of the smart hotels of a hundred Jonesvilles.

If, however, you had appeared in the shop any day this year, you would have noticed the sixth chair at once. Number Six had become a personage. He was no longer a mere barber, springing up at the tap of a bell when a customer appeared. He was an artist, the master of the shingle bob, a person of consequence.

H. George was the fashion; and because he meant money flowing down the marble steps and into the antiseptic, sanitary, tile-and-brass basement of the New Trianon, rules and customs of the barbering profession were swept aside for him. He was permitted to step out of line and greet his clients, appraising with his brown artist's eye the need of each for his sedulous shearing. He spoke to the women and girls quietly and confidentially, telling them he would soon be through, asking them to be so kind as to wait. He would say he would be only half a second; H. George never made anybody wait longer than that. And if the half-second became a half-hour or an hour and a half, the girls and matrons waiting to be shingled never seemed to mind. To be shingled by anyone but H. George Chadwick was unthinkable.

THE SMART women of the younger set of Jonesville, Indiana, lunched at the tearoom of the New Bon Marche, went to the first-run films at the New Paradise Theater, which stood on the side of the Jonesville Opera House; putted at the Jonesville Country Club and were shingled in the New Hotel Trianon. H. George Chadwick was as essential to the social fabric of the city as Thousand Island dressing to the weekly luncheon of the Jonesville Rotary Club. Life without H. George was not to be contemplated. One might as well think of trying to continue Jonesville without the Chamber of Commerce.

H. George Chadwick was not an ordinary barber. He had a mind. Mrs. Ellington P. Gracie discovered it; and it was she who was the right person to whisper H. George's name in the right place and at the right time. She did more than whisper. She assumed that thoughtful, half-worried look which made the women of the Jonesville Country Club certain she had a life slightly beyond their determined probings; and as she assumed it she rubbed her ginger-ale glass on the table—she was sitting on the porch of the Country Club—and remarked:

"I don't know what you think, girls, but it seems to me that something ought to be done about a young man capable of appreciating the arts but who is tied to a barber chair. He doesn't say much, but I can tell he is unhappy."

Edie Naylor leaned forward, the side muscles in her thin neck straining.

"Betty, you have the faculty of discovering the most interesting phases of life. I've said to Fanny here a thousand times—haven't I, Fanny?—that Betty Gracie ought to be a writer, with her gift for analyzing people."

She settled back in her chair, satisfied, her beaming eyes fixed on her hostess. Mrs. Gracie waved the compliment away. "It isn't that," she said, her own eyes fixed on the distant fairways. "I may have a little more of the gift of observation than the ordinary woman"—Edie and Fanny nodded vigorously and looked at each other—"but it really is nothing more than my sympathy for people, a—a capacity for understanding them." She paused; then, in a moment, she added dreamily:

"My hunger for life! I find something here and there that appeases it temporarily."

She tapped a cigarette reflectively on the table, then went on in a lighter tone:

"But I am practical. Girls, I want you both to go to the New Trianon and have your hair shingled. Ask for Mr. Chadwick—H. George Chadwick; and if he is busy, wait for him. It isn't exactly for him, but for something that we all have in common. The fact that he is a barber must not bar him from the contacts with people who think as he does. He gives a perfect shingle"—she laid aside her close-fitting hat, revealing a pineapple effect along the back of her head—"and in a week you girls can make him the mode for Jonesville. It is your duty—our duty. It isn't often one finds a barber to whom baseball scores and boxing results are nothing. What do you suppose he has locked up in his drawer?"

"You discover the most surprising things, Betty. How are people like Edie and myself to tell what he has?"

Fanny—Mrs. John P. Lurcher—was as much a variant from the lissome on the plus side as Edie Naylor was on the minus. Mrs. Gracie was authentically beautiful in the eyes of all Jonesville, and she saw no reason for avoiding contrasts for companions.

"WELL, you probably won't believe me," said Mrs. Gracie. "I don't think I had better tell you. You and Edie go and have your hair cut by him and mention him to everybody—that is, everybody who is anybody; you know what I mean—and talk to him; let him know that your minds are not wholly destroyed by the life we are compelled to lead here in Jonesville. Then you will find out what he has in his drawer."

"People like you, Betty, have the fortitude to wait. But think of Fanny and me. We can't go to the Trianon until tomorrow; and it may be weeks before we can lead up to his secret. Once a week is as often as we could go decently."

"Well, I will tell you," said Betty. "I wouldn't tell anybody else, and I don't want you to repeat it. Few people would grasp the significance at all. Mr. Chadwick has, locked in the drawer of his mirror at the New Trianon, a copy of the first number of 'The American Jupiter'!"

Betty did not look at her two speechless companions. She knew what the effects of her words would be. Leaving them, she walked to the edge of the porch and stood leaning against a pillar, looking out across the golf course.

Presently a hand rested on hers as it touched the railing, and from the other side an arm slipped around her waist.

"We know how it must make you feel to find such a mind, such a heart, in such a place, in such an environment." It was Edie speaking.

"Yes; and we will keep your confidence," added Fanny, pressing her warm, ample frame against her hostess and patting her hand.

"Go. I have told you more than I intended to," said Mrs. Gracie, in a flat tone, without looking at them. "But I want you to go to him; I want you to help me make him somebody, at least among the—the clods of Jonesville."

Fanny and Edie exchanged glances; each pressed a hand of their friend and leader, and then withdrew without a word, leaving her standing with that far-away look in her eyes.

WHEN H. George Chadwick finished the thirtieth shingle in a day crowded with smiles from his feminine clients and frowns from his fellow barbers, the clock stood 15 minutes past closing hour. If he changed quickly to his new conservative English-style suit, he would just have time to keep his nightly appointment at the employes' entrance of the New Trianon.

Tonight, however, he moved slowly. His mind caressed a memory of a lovely creature from another world who, as she stepped from his chair, had paused and, fixing him with her jade eyes, had murmured:

"You will go on with your play, won't you?"

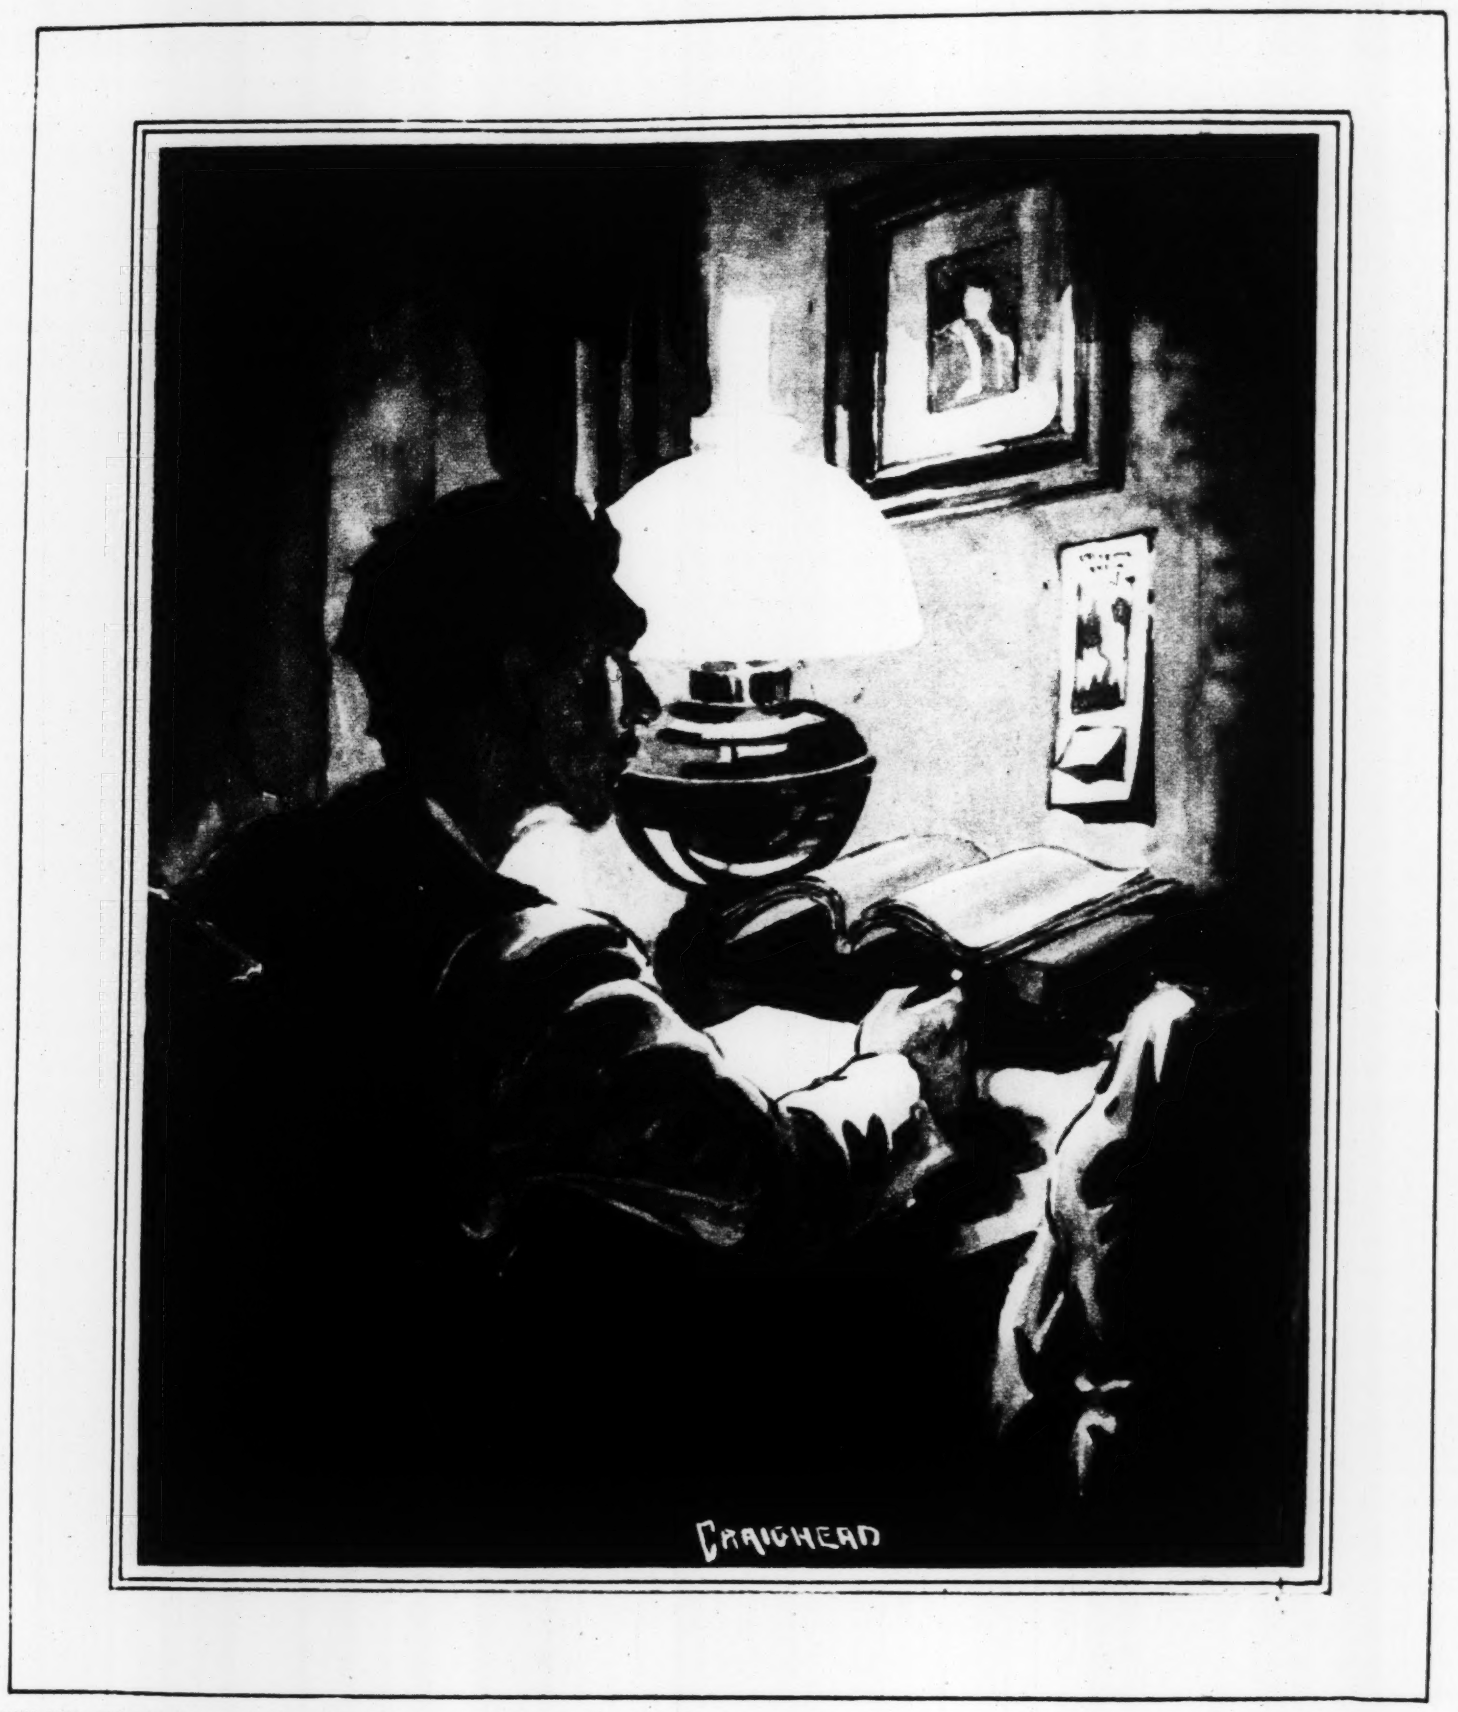
And he, handing her a cashier's ticket and smiling back, had answered:

"For you."

He didn't know how he had found the courage. He couldn't recall when he had spoken of a play. But the dazzling being, only the third time in his chair, had said softly:

"I've been suspecting things about you. You write, don't you? I've been thinking about it ever since you showed me your copy of the first number of 'The Jupiter.'"

H. George did not write. He had no intention of writing. But his shingle-bob visitors had suddenly begun to allude to writing as if he did. It was not so much what they said as the way they said it that made him feel a subtle suggestion.



"IN HIS ROOM he sat before his tablet and tried to summon those opening lines for his play, 'The Iron Hook.' They would not come."

She was the wife of Gracie, president of the Jonesville First and Federal National Bank and Trust Company; and as he snipped her back hair, she had said:

"We Americans are too materialistic, don't you think? We don't think enough about the finer things. If I were a man, I would let business go. I would paint, or write, or compose great music."

H. George had looked at her reflection in the glass. The little girl—she was hardly more than a girl—might be unhappy with that big burly Gracie and his everlasting bank combinations. H. George had shaved him that very day, running him in between shingles. He had been in a hurry to get through and catch a New York train, he had said. Always buried in business, he probably was starving the little girl for the finer things of life.

"YOU MUST have thought often of doing something to express yourself," she had remarked.

H. George forgot that the magazine in his drawer did not mean anything to him, that it had been given him by a traveling salesman, and he had saved it merely because he always saved everything anybody gave him. But he answered her:

"I used to think I'd like to write plays or something."

"Splendid! But you have given it up?"

He had remained silent.

"What was your play called? Won't you tell me?" she had asked.

He had had no play, so, of course, he had not called it anything. But, considering the depths of those jade eyes—he thought they were jade—he had replied:

"I thought of calling it something like 'The Hidden Hand.'"

"How thrilling! It must be something like 'The Bat.' Just think! If you would write just one play like 'The Bat,' you could leave this work and devote your whole life to art."

She had ended with a little gasp; and when she left she had paused ever so briefly and had added:

"You will go on with it, won't you?"

She had hurried away. He didn't know whether she heard his "For you!" or not. Well, he wasn't afraid of Gracie. If that big stiff wasn't treating the little girl right——

He moved slowly toward the trade entrance of the hotel.

"You're five minutes late," snapped Lena, stepping out of the shadow. "If we don't hurry we won't get a seat."

He surveyed the girl calmly. Lena was a waitress in Ye Olde English Coffee Shoppe of the Trianon—and his girl.

H. George walked moodily along beside her, making for the corner of Pershing avenue and Belleau boulevard. If you haven't been back to Jonesville for a number of years, you perhaps don't know that Main street is now Pershing avenue and Michigan street is Belleau boulevard. At the southeast corner is an immense stucco front covered with electric lights. It is the New Paradise Theater.

The bill at the New Paradise is changed twice a week, and the change governs two-sevenths of the evenings of all the Lenas in Jonesville.

H. GEORGE CHADWICK had been taking Lena to the New Paradise Theater two evenings a week for almost two years. They were engaged. Not much was said about it, but the sister with whom Lena boarded, at the end of the Riverdale avenue car line, understood that Lena and George were to be married, and had said to her husband, who drove a truck for the New Bon Marche Department Store, that it couldn't be too soon to suit her.

Tonight H. George was restless. The theater, in spite of the cooling breeze generated by the million-dollar refrigerating plant, was close and the program was tedious. Lena, reclining in her seat, her eyes half-closed, was unconscious of her suitor's dissatisfaction.

H. George wondered what Mrs. Gracie would think of these nights in the New Paradise. She probably pictured him at home, in his furnished room on Railroad avenue, working on his play. It was a little unfair to her, he thought, for him to be running around, having a good time, when she was a prisoner. Gracie must be 10 years older than his wife. You could tell that she was unhappy, he thought.

When the film came to its end and the lights flashed on, H. George and Lena got slowly to their feet and in a daze wandered down the steep aisles toward the exit. They didn't talk about what they had seen; that was contrary to usage. It was all right to say, "Some pitchure!" and to that the other might reply, "I'll say!" Further than that no comment was expected or would have been understood.

One was expected to move in a kind of trance down the block to the Sugar Bowl and there consume in silence a "double nut chocolate banana split." The Sugar Bowl would be full of other Lenas and their "boy friends," all having "double nut chocolate banana splits," with perhaps a disillusioned world-weary young man of 24 or so having a cherry coke instead.

H. George and Lena strolled toward the shining front of the Sugar Bowl as a matter of course. Lena slipped her arm through his and walked as sinuously as her child-like straightness permitted. Lena was authentically pretty, and she wore her close-fitting poke around her shingled head saucily and looked up at one with the precise shade of sophisticated innocence that was prescribed by the fashion in Jonesville. Lena was satisfied with life. Her wages and tips brought her enough for her clothes and board and allowed her to save two or three dollars a week. H. George was making what was called "good money"; he used just enough brilliantine on his hair to give him the required Valentino poll; and his trousers were belled at the bottom just enough.

The dash of fresh air had stirred H. George from his lethargy, and he had almost forgotten he was a serious, disappointed man as a flood of voices swept over him from the curb, at which a mammoth touring car, as rakish as a torpedo boat, had stopped.

"Don't go in there! It's a cheap place—bum!"

"Let's drive on out to the Pine Tree Inn and get something good. This place is awful."

It was the voice of the Jonesville Country Club uttering its verdict on the Sugar Bowl, to which some of the passengers in the big car evidently were willing to go. And the speaker, sitting behind the wheel, who had said that the Sugar Bowl was a cheap place and bum, was—H. George's knees felt suddenly weak—Mrs. Ellington P. Gracie.

The great green car shot away into the traffic and George and Lena turned into the Sugar Bowl. She had not heard the flutter of words from the car, and she made for her favorite seat in one of the high-backed nooks with her studied air of polite aloofness from the waitresses who were flying about with trays of sodas. A waitress from Ye Olde English Coffee Shoppe of the Hotel New Trianon had nothing in common with a Sugar Bowl girl.

FILLED with dread, H. George lurched miserably into his seat opposite her. Could Mrs. Gracie have seen that he and Lena were practically entering the Sugar Bowl, the place for which she had nothing but contempt? Had he, by merely passing along in his accustomed channel, destroyed for her the illusion she had begun to cherish, for her solace against the burdensome existence she was condemned to with Gracie? H. George knew what her life must be with him, the big mercenary brute, thinking of nothing but money, day and night.

Like all successful artists, H. George had developed an easy secondary technique which served between his periods of exaltation. He brooded next day, wondering how he could avoid his engagement to take Lena to the New Crystal Grotto Dance Palace. But if he brooded he did not slight the girls and women who waited for him in the barber shop. He gave them what they came for, the shingle in the precise mode which had brought him his fame in Jonesville. He gave them of his genius without effort, masking his worry, and even throwing in occasionally a smile or a complimentary murmur as he roved his scissors through some particularly lovely hair.

He would convince Mrs. Gracie; he had made that decision. If he could evade Lena satisfactorily and without arousing her suspicion, he would spend the evening in his room working on his play. He had fixed upon a title. It would be "The Iron Hook"; and when the bloody hook should come stealing through the window at the back of the stage in the play of his imaginings, the screams of frightened women in the audience would be more terrible than any ever heard at matinees of "The Bat." He had once seen a crippled man with an iron hook for a hand. It would be simple to improve on "The Bat." He felt a desire to get down to work on the first act at once.

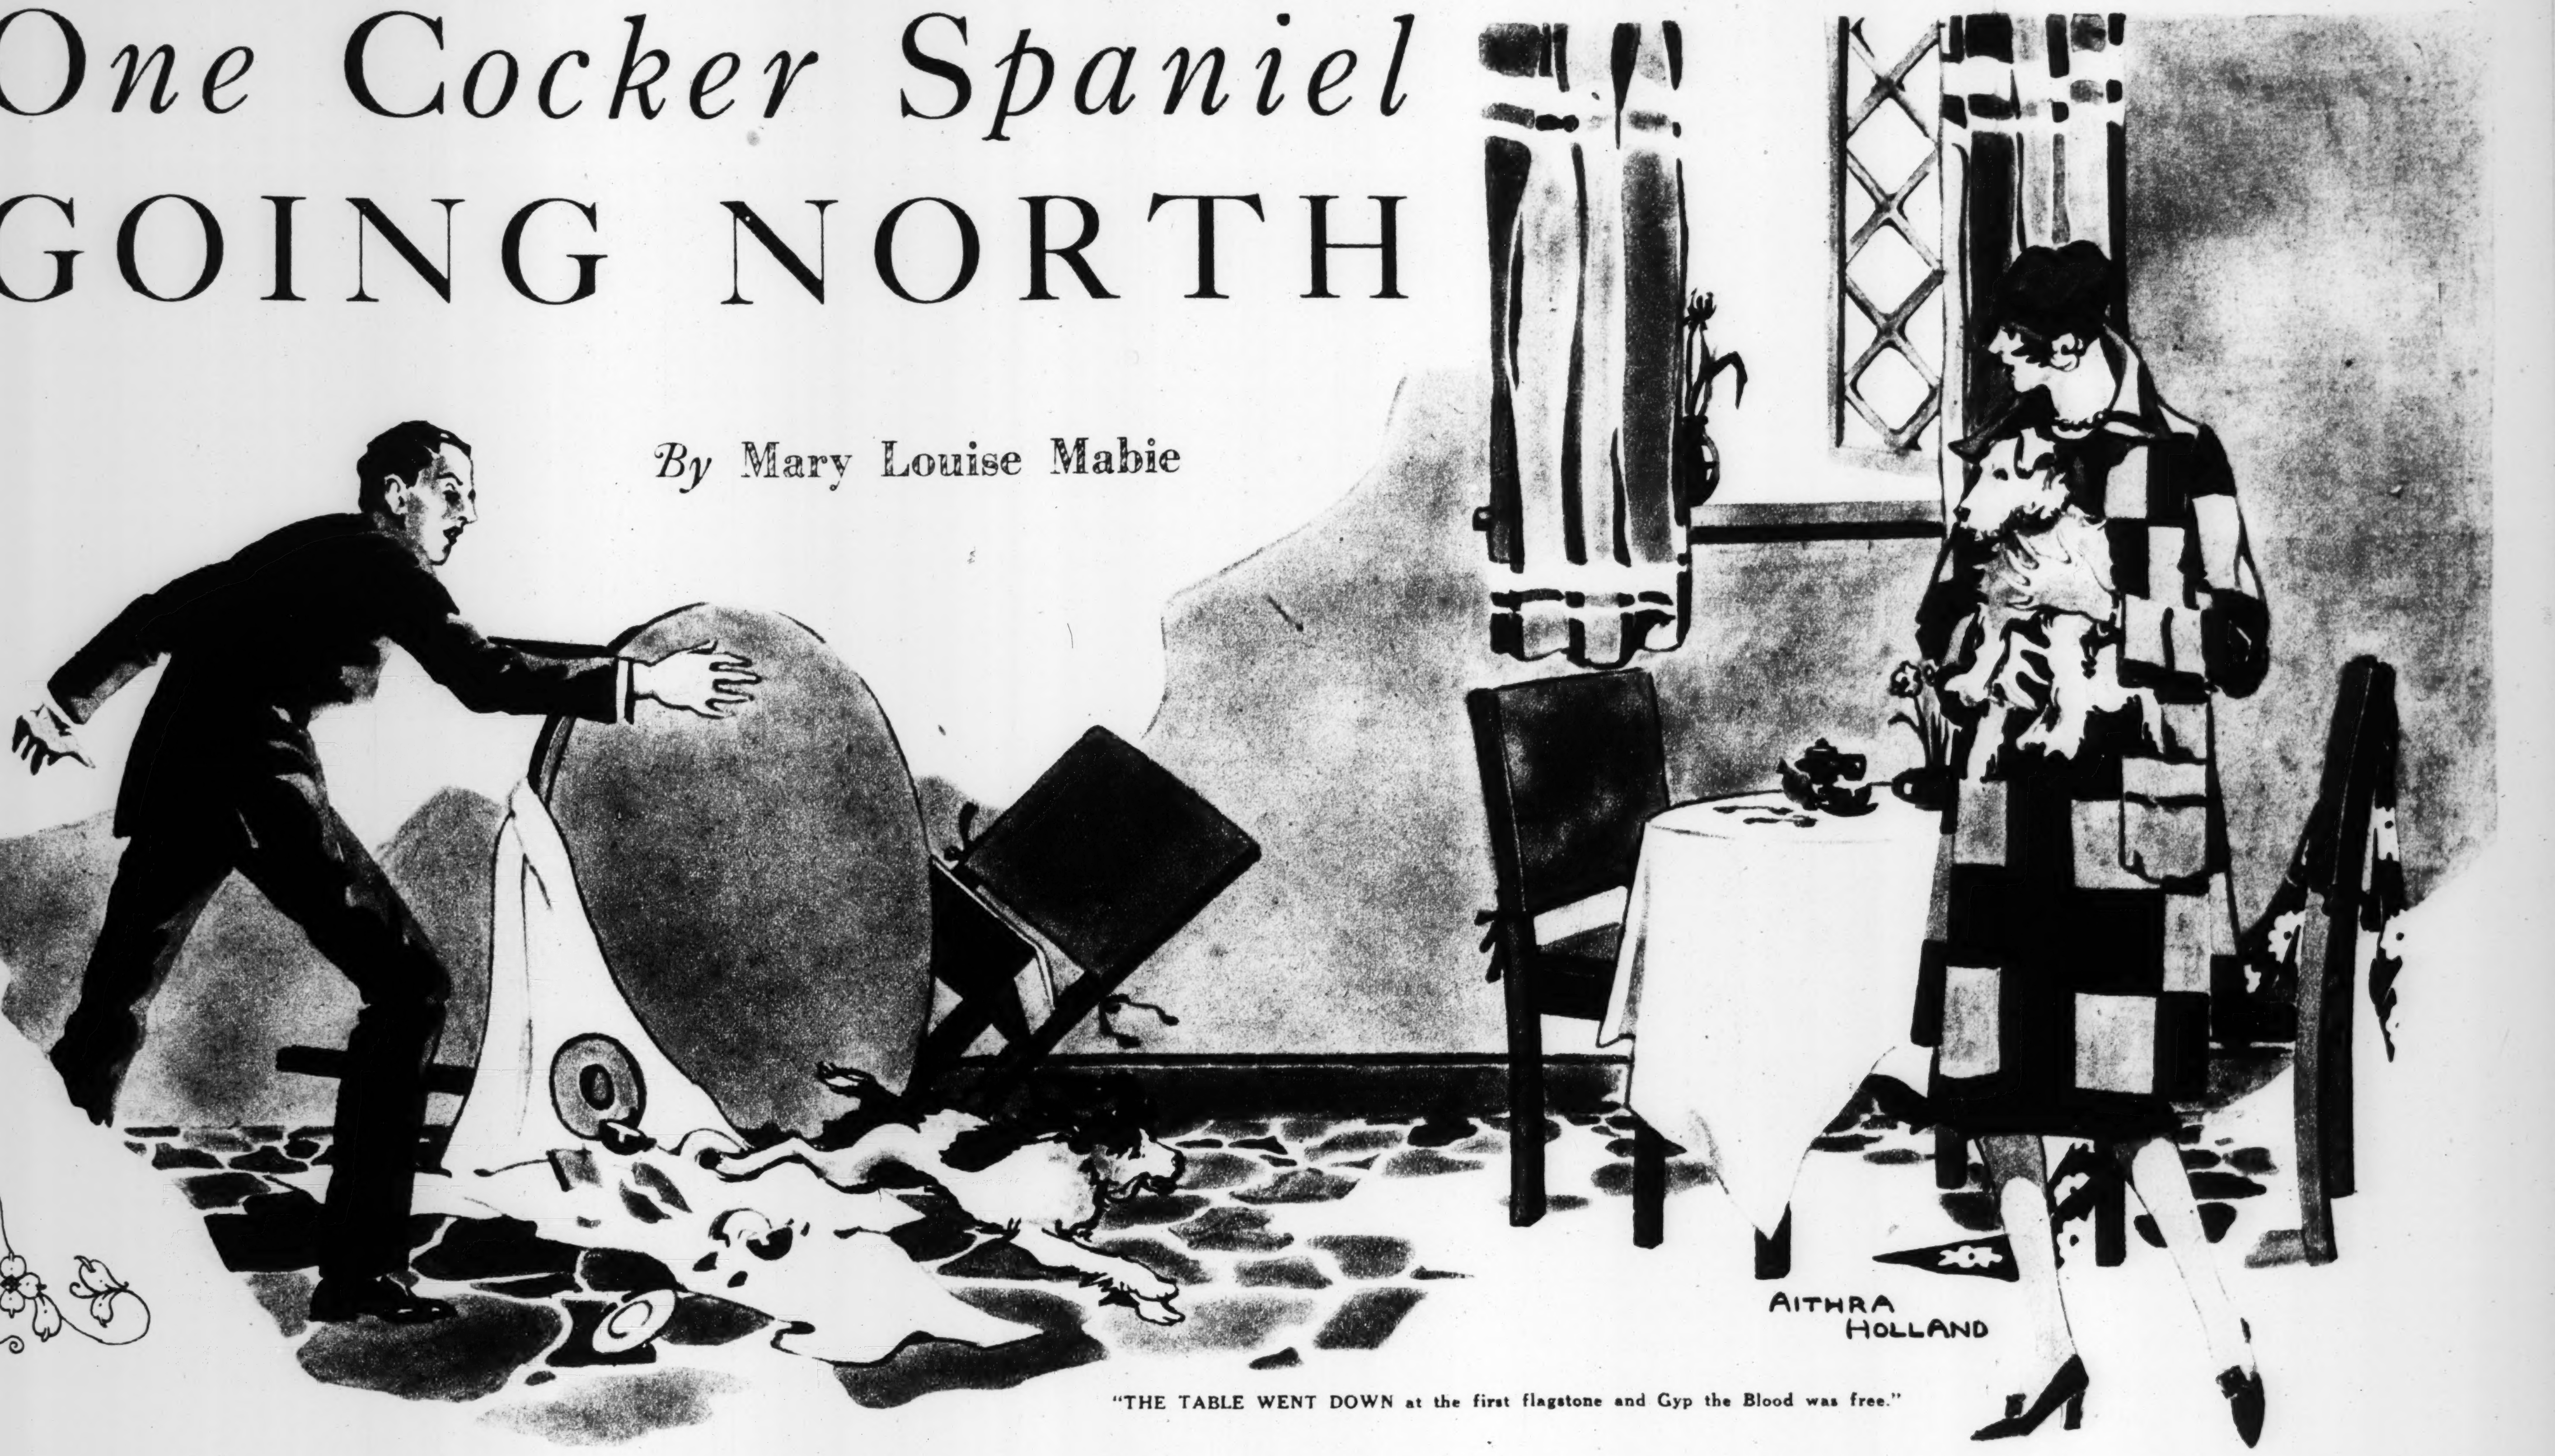
One Cocker Spaniel
GOING NORTH



"THE TABLE WENT DOWN at the first flagstone and Gyp the Blood was free."

By Mary Louise Mabie

MIGUEL stood among suitcases on the curve of the drive. Near him the car was waiting, long and low and masterful, with shining nickel wings beside the motometer. Miguel was filled with pride in the wings, with longing for the motometer, with responsibility and with watermelon.

He lifted in the suitcases. There was a large unopened box of dog biscuit on the front seat. He shook the box gently and poked it with a mystified Mexican thumb. But at the slam of a far-off screen door he sprang from the running board and stood aside, serenly surveying the tops of remote eucalyptus.

Martin Barbery was coming down the drive, looking at his watch. Always, thought Miguel, he punches the clock. Always the strip-maps, the worried look. And plenty of money. Miguel shook his head admiringly. So tall, so businesslike, like a telegraph pole.

"The suitcases are in," cried Miguel. "And the box, he too is in. It is maybe for a dog?"

"It is, maybe, for a dog."

"Your dog, Mr. Barbery?"

"My uncle's."

"An uncle? An old man?" sighed Miguel. "He is dead, maybe. In heaven?"

"No, no," said Martin, startled. "Not dead. Only in San Francisco."

"Ah," sighed Miguel, saddened by departure. "You go up San Francisco way? Not far? Not Vancouver? Not Portland? No trip? No fine place? No bandits? No forest fires? In the North, caramba, the mountains are burning."

Once on the highway, before the southbound traffic, ahead of the busses from San Diego, Martin settled back. He even fished in a pocket and drew out Uncle Benny's telegram.

"One cocker spaniel, Gyp the Blood," ran Uncle Benny's telegram. "Shipped Chicago Los Angeles P. S. station. Bring north. Benjamin Barbery."

MARTIN frowned. This was his father's brother, the keen and crafty Uncle Benny, lured from Chicago and points east by the promise of sunshine perpetual; Uncle Benny, at the last minute distrusting Los Angeles, changing his mind and his tickets. But the dog had already been sent.

Now Martin had never met Uncle Benny but he had heard rumors, the thunder of Uncle Benny's rolling millions upon the eastern horizon; the price of Uncle Benny's town cars; the price of Uncle Benny's teeth. He would have trouble with Uncle Benny. He had already had some trouble, but he would have much more. He had already offended Uncle Benny.

Martin reviewed the matter judicially. Uncle Benny owned friends and the friends owned a daughter who had been troublesome enough to come west for August. Martin, exhorted by long distance to show her the Barbery ranch, had smoked his pipe and frowned at the wall. Girls had no place on the Barbery ranch, especially girls with a name like hers. "Clelie." * * "Clelie." It was a curiously clinging name. A name belonging to a little marquise with high-heeled, clicking slippers. It was frivolous, feminine, French; hard to remember, hard to forget. Clelie * * * Like a small chateau by an emerald lake, but not in the least like the Barbery ranch.

Clelie had driven in, one August Sunday. She had pointed to the royal palms wrapped in quiet, she had rung the bell, had pounded, in fact, like the parcel post while Martin, above, smoked and frowned at the wall. Miguel, sent smiling blithely upstairs, went smiling, hurriedly, downstairs, with the uneasy news that the boss was in Portland. She had gone away.

He was meeting the morning traffic out of L. A. when he decided ominously that he was glad she had gone away. But Uncle Benny would be difficult.

The baggage master was sitting with his chewing gum upon a trunk.

"You have a dog here—" Martin began.

"The dog, Bill," shouted the baggage master over his shoulder.

"The pup in the trunk?" queried Bill from the shadows.

Martin, amused, sat down on a weighing machine. And then Bill appeared out of the void, with a beautiful trunk; a green trunk with a green lid and a padlock. The typewritten combination of the padlock swung in a green leather folder, above the initials, G. T. B. It was a wonderful trunk and they knew it. Even Bill knew it. He opened the padlock and raised the lid. And there before them sat Gyp the Blood.

NOW Gyp the Blood was small and warm and eager; a cobweb hung from his little gray chin. He gazed up earnestly at Martin, decided after all that the world was good though a little too big, and consigned himself to fate and California. He folded his ruffled paws, prayerfully, across his ruffled chest. Expectantly he presented his stomach to the universe. And the three men knelt and scratched his trusting stomach. For, as usual, all the world smiled—with Gyp the Blood.

There are trucks on the Coast Route. There are tourists and towns, oceans and airplanes. Through tunnels, you see queer hills and strange mountains. There is a mile where the road becomes a wooden trestle along the coast, with a train roaring steep on the hillside above you, and the ocean below. Away from the sea, the road is smooth and dark. Ahead on the upgrades are mirages. Ahead on the down-grades are auto camps.

Gyp the Blood pointed his nose toward the north while his great black ears blew back in curls and banners. Motoring interested Gyp the Blood. He viewed the landscape tolerantly, standing, black and silver, in his shining harness against the off-shore wind.

Gyp the Blood, Champion of the World, Has an Important Part in This Comedy of California. Human Characters Include the Rich but Testy Uncle, the Young Nephew, the Young Woman, Restaurant and Hotel People and a Policeman.

"You have two souls, brother," said Martin, "one in each eye."

Gyp the Blood, thus addressed, swung an indolent paw and glanced back at Martin over his sturdy shoulder.

With his free hand, Martin opened the box of dog biscuit. Gyp the Blood anxiously watched. He preferred the driver to drive, not to snatch about under the seat. Nevertheless, he politely accepted a biscuit, crunched, meditated and blew back his ears.

"Fat cocker spaniels are stupid," Martin suggested after a long period of crunching and meditating.

Gyp the Blood composedly watched the putting away of the delectable box. Then, bereft, he gazed with sudden desperation at the empty ocean, the empty road, the dull and empty sky. And then he ramped. His harness jingled and his ears spun round like pinwheels. His eyes became crimson. Up and down, back and forth, he jounced and jingled, jingled and jounced.

In vain Martin thought of mileages. In vain he noticed the weather and a great purple streak of seaweed floating from the foot of the hills. Gyp the Blood churned and gasped. He allowed his tongue to dangle. He rumpled one furry ear over his head and glared from beneath it like a buccaneer under a hat.

Martin believed in discipline, in habits-not-to-be-formed. He believed in discipline for 15 minutes. Then with his free hand he searched under the seat—and gave him another biscuit.

* * * * * *

It was one o'clock in Santa Barbara and the Spanish court under its rust-colored awning was fashionably filled when the little party of one Barbery and one dog appeared in the adobe doorway.

"IF YOU could leave your dog outside," suggested the manager, coming forward gravely, with a smooth, fashionable forehead and a smooth, fashionable voice which ran up and down the scale perpetually in little waves of words. It would hardly have surprised Martin if her voice had not stopped at scales but had gone on indefinitely, round and round the room or out of the doorway, home. Martin could imagine it fashionably sprinting along the Coast Route on its way to Carmel.

"We prefer not to admit dogs," the voice added, dispassionately.

"That's odd," declared Martin, "for there is a white Sealyham terrier beyond the fountain with the girl in gray."

"Of course," smiled the manager, desperately, "but Miss Moore knows how to handle dogs. She shows them—all over the country. Her dog is a champion."

"They only admit champions, brother," said Martin over his shoulder. The manager bit her lip. Angrily she stared at the listening tearoom. Amused, the tearoom stared back at her. Martin surveyed the flagstones, upon one of which Gyp the Blood was solidly sitting. "We are in," said Gyp the Blood's crimson eye. "And we intend to remain."

"I wouldn't move, brother," advised Martin, looking down over the edge of their dull blue metal table. "You're hitched. Your leash is under the table leg. And besides, you know, you're a gentleman and you have had your lunch."

Gyp the Blood sat stodgily. He was a low dog and therefore at a disadvantage in crowds. He saw only feet. He had, as yet, missed the Sealyham terrier.

It must have been during the dessert that Gyp the Blood glimpsed among the tables a fluffy blur of white. Gyp the Blood, consigned for so long to the outer darkness of flagstones and feet, was nothing if not astute. After careful peering, the blur resolved itself into a dog, a white furry dog, that was being fed buns.

GYP THE BLOOD did not stop to bark. Without preliminaries, he started forward, cargoed, like a little tug convoying an ocean liner.

The table went down at the first flagstone and Gyp the Blood was free, but his pursuer was upon him. It was a disorderly chase. Round and round the tea room flew Gyp the Blood like an animate rag in the path of a strong gale; round and round after him flew Martin Barbery and a growing number of fashionable lunchers. Dull blue chairs went down with regular bangs. And the girl in gray stood in the midst of the melee.

It ended at a little old gentleman in the doorway. The little old gentleman had a cap and two canes and he appeared inopportunely for him just as Gyp the Blood was advancing like the wind down the home stretch toward the open door. The last crash was the little old gentleman.

Martin helped him up and unwrapped Gyppie's leash from the little old gentleman's lacerated leg. Behind him were ruin, confusion, explanations. Under his arm panted Gyp the Blood, regarding him with a delighted eye. And Martin, suddenly, insanely, wanted to laugh.

But he didn't laugh. He walked back into the tearoom and stopped before the girl in gray.

"I'm sorry," said Martin.

The girl in gray looked up at him and down at the wicked burden under his arm.

"Sorry," echoed the girl in gray. "Why, it's the first thing that's happened in two weeks."

She reached out a tentative hand and pulled at Gyppie's curls. And Martin looked down at her hands, which were little and white and cool. Suddenly he realized that she was beautiful.

But the girl was looking up at him.

"The little dog is so lovely," she was saying reassuringly. "Every detail. The black roof of his mouth. The curl on the end of his tail. And his whiskers. Have you managed to feel his whiskers?"

Martin, groping under Gyppie's chin, vaguely discovered whiskers.

"He's Gyp the Blood," said Martin uncertainly.

"Gyp the Blood," repeated the girl in gray. "I—I thought he would be."

IT OCCURRED to Martin, after it was all over, to be a little puzzled. But Gyp the Blood beside him in the car only stirred gently and sighed a little. His ruffled paws were weary and so, logically, easily, he slept. Motoring no longer interested Gyp the Blood.

Still, he thrust a drowsy face over the side when they stopped for gas.

"Pipe the hound," said the gas man. "Hello, Strongheart."

It was while they were putting air in the tires that the girl in gray drove in. The girl had a closed car and her good little dog appeared dimly within it.

"We had a town car in today," the gas man marveled. "A footman. Old boy with two canes and a game leg, keeps the chauffeur down to 25 an hour so they're all mad. Seen him on the road?"

"I saw him," admitted Martin. "My dog here gave him the leg."

Three cars on the Coast Route. Other cars, of course, but these three driving slowly.

"Merrylegs," said the girl in gray, in the second car, "are they coming, too? Will they stop at San Claire tonight? Hold your chin up, Merrylegs, and look at California."

Three cars on the Coast Route. In the first rode wealth; in the second, romance; in the third, Gyp the Blood.

From the top of the hills Martin could discern the riding blur of Merrylegs three-quarters of a mile ahead.

"My life is a ranch," said Martin. "And yours is an adventure. You're lucky, brother. But, at that, it's lonely, isn't it?"

Gyp the Blood regarded him, saddened, wistful, understanding. Gyp the Blood was old in understanding. For he was a dog.

* * * * * *

At the Tavern of San Claire, the memory of quality remains long after the price is forgotten.

"Of course, his dinner shall be taken out to him," said the man at the desk. "I will arrange it myself—whatever you wish him to be served."

"But he must stay in the car?" asked Martin hopelessly.

"He must stay in the car," repeated the man at the desk inflexibly.

"You must stay in the car," repeated Martin as they drove toward the line of garages.

Gyp the Blood said nothing.

"Now, about your dinner," Martin began, coming around for further instructions after the car was locked. "A pork chop?"

Gyp the Blood said nothing.

"I have a setter," Martin argued irresolutely. "He enjoys them. Think, brother, nice pork, nice chop. Nice bell-boy bringing it out."

At the door he looked back.

"Good night, brother."

But Gyp the Blood said nothing.

At half past 4 the night clerk knocked at Martin's door. In the narrow hall the night clerk appeared round and bald and querulous. To Martin's sleepy eyes he looked rather like an upturned egg.

"Your dog is howling," said the night clerk, gloomily.

The lobby was darkened and deserted; but outside, on the pale road, the cars went by, the fast cars that precede the dawn—a roar and then silence. Sometimes they came in groups, sometimes singly, but they all came fast. In the intermittent silences Martin could hear the loud, uplifted voice of Gyp the Blood.

"My word," exclaimed Martin. "He sounds like paper bags exploding."

"It sounds like patrons exploding," said the night clerk.

Martin entered the garage and felt dimly along the side of the car. All sounds promptly ceased while an avalanche of fur threshed in welcome.

The tourists of the San Claire Tavern slept serenely. The night clerk meditated, secure, behind his desk. Martin dreamed at the steering wheel, with a gentle head laid lovingly against his hand. And through dawn, on the road outside, the cars fled by.

IN THE Salinas Valley there is wind. It has blown the hills away and those that were left are blowing now. In the center of the valley lies the Salinas River, a wide wash of white stones and polished sand. The railroad follows the highroad through, through to the north and the sea and the green hills again.

In the Salinas Valley there is wind. The trains blow and blow, and echo and echo. "There's always a breeze in the afternoon," explain the dwellers in the Salinas Valley.

The Salinas Valley is beautiful as only a desert can be beautiful—an alkali desert with now and then a fervent strip of green alfalfa near a ranch-house. You pass white hills to whiter hills beyond. There is one great distant mountain that seemingly you never pass. But by the time the afternoon breeze is threatening the roofs of the patient little cars you find, looking back, that the mountain lies south. The Salinas Valley is done.

Most people take it on the "second day out." They reach Salinas and the Motor Inn about mid-afternoon, with the dust of a hundred miles flung in their eyes. Then suddenly before them the Motor Inn appears, out of the very ground itself; the Motor Inn, where an open fire glows all night and

It Seems to Me

By Heywood Broun

WRITING about Mlle. Lenglen, Vincent Richards said: "Nobody would expect an artist to paint if he didn't feel in the mood. Suzanne is an artist on the tennis court, and perhaps it is not too much to allow her the privileges of an artistic temperament."

This seems to me an understanding attitude. The French girl has been very severely criticised by most American commentators on athletics, because she is, as they say, a bad sport.

I suppose she is, but that does not alienate my sympathies. Very much that goes into the popular concept of the sporting ideal is not at all down my alley. The phrase "a good sport" makes me prickle almost as much as that other favorite "a good soldier."

And there is an essential similarity. A man or a woman is called "a good soldier" when he sinks his own desires, perhaps his very beliefs and ideals, in order to conform to some line of conduct imposed from the outside. According to the army standard, Col. Mitchell was not a good soldier because he blurted out the charges he had to make instead of proffering them politely and secretly so that they might be strangled quietly.

In other words, being a good soldier or being a good sport is not instinctive. Both attitudes must be artificially fostered. I don't present that as necessarily an indictment. The heroine in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" records that "Dr. Froyd said that all I needed was to cultivate a few inhibitions and get some sleep." Until the world is well within the city limits of Utopia, all of us must tincture our conduct with tradition and some of the restraints which it imposes.

READILY enough, I will grant that there are situations in which it may be essential for the individual to become "the good soldier" even though it sickens him. Certainly, in times of peace this necessity should not be constant. But sport is play and ought to be more free. It is to get release from inhibitions that men swing niblicks savagely at golf balls tethered in the sand. Many a one is able to deal kindly with those about him because he has just satisfied his inner urge to be powerful and destructive through slashing great divots out of nice green turf. Games seem to me the very activity in which the participant should follow his natural inclinations. Why shouldn't losers grumble and winners swagger? Games are substitutes for bloodier conflicts, and if you drain out of them all rudimentary emotion the purpose of the effort is all but nullified.

Chief of all the charges against Suzanne Lenglen is that she doesn't like to lose. Who does? Many have cultivated and perfected the facile hypocrisy of pretending not to care, but cut the heart out of the most flamboyantly chivalrous and you'll find as much bile in it as Lenglen ever showed under adversity. And since sportsmanship is so often the thinnest of veneers I can't be moved to believe that it is important.

I saw Lenglen lose to Molla Mallory at Forest Hills and instead of anger against the defaulting French woman I felt sympathy. To my eyes she was truly sick. Granted that the illness was psychic, it was no less real. Our tradition would have impelled her to face the flood of disaster even though it killed. She could be carried off the court with honor, but it was a monstrous thing for her to stop while it was still within her power to walk.

THAT seems to me less than sensible. In defaulting, Lenglen may have taken something away from the triumph which rightfully belonged to Molla Mallory. Since the match ended as it did, the victor could not have all the fun of knowing, and having the world know with her, that in fair tennis combat she had defeated the finest woman player yet known in the history of the game. But the fact is that Lenglen was and is by far the better player. It was another factor which downed Suzanne. Molla had ample material with which to exalt her own ego. Her triumph was one of character, which is just as valuable as tennis proficiency.

Mrs. Mallory defeated Lenglen by overawing her. The fierceness of the Norse woman's attack sent the visitor into a panic. She was far from home and frightened. The cough which clutched the throat of Lenglen came directly out of malicious animal magnetism which Molla slammed across the court at her adversary. It was as if the loser felt those strong and determined fingers around her neck. She admitted that she was, for that afternoon, licked and humiliated and did not ask Mrs. Mallory to prove a fact which was quite evident.

THAT seems to me as frank an indication of surrender as need be required. In golf one does not play the bye holes, and to prolong this particular tennis match can hardly have served to change the result. Only those bloody-minded fight fans who howl in rage when a towel is thrown into the ring could have wanted to see more of this particular encounter.

But my partisanship of Lenglen goes much farther than this. She is such a romantic figure. Suzanne has now engaged in tennis tournaments for many years and has wholly escaped the blight which falls

Spring Cleaning

By Elwood D. Ullman Jr.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 1, '26.

DEAR GERTIE: Was sorry to hear you arrived at your destination with a headache, but you are lucky to get off with only a headache after traveling 1000 miles with that sister you've got. Don't think I'm going to pull a Harry Carey on account of your absence. I have decided to keep occupied by sprucing up the house, so when you come home you won't recognize the old hut. What do you think of the idea?

HOBART.

Robmore Beach, Fla., Feb. 3rd.

Dearest Hobart: I think the idea is fine, but I am apprehensive over the execution. However, I am not discouraging you. I am only warning you. You can start by walloping the cigar ashes out of the rugs. Once you have swept out the halls with a kitchen mashie, you will understand why I took a vacation.

GERT.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 10th.

Dearest Gertie: Where is the key to the camphor closet?

HOBART.

Robmore Beach, Fla., Feb. 12th.

Dearest Hobart: You poor polecat, the camphor closet isn't locked and never had a key. Circulate a mop, and quit stalling.

GERT.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 15th.

DEAR GERTIE: I phoned the interior decorators yesterday to come out and give the cabin the once-over, and they sent a guy out and he took one slant at the dining room and said your motif was wrong. I always knew your mother's picture disfigured the place, and I was about to take it and hang it in the garage, only I didn't have the heart to turn the old dame outside, so I put her in the hall where she will frighten away collectors. I got a letter from the interior decorators this morning, and they said they would straighten up the shack for a couple of hundred fish, but I told them I would wait until I had fully decided. What have you fully decided?

HOBART.

Robmore Beach, Fla., Feb. 18th.

Dear Hobart: You scallawag, I knew you never had any intention of doing the job yourself. If you dare hire any decorators, you will get decorated yourself on my arrival. We can't afford that expense, as we need a new fur coat.

GERT.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 20th.

DEAR GERTIE: Come to think of it, our fur coat is getting to look kind of rusty, and it doesn't harmonize with our evening gown. Well, I figured it would be better not to hire those interior decorating guys, so last night I began the job myself. I thought I would start on my golf clubs. After an intensive search, I discovered that our fool janitor has been stoking the furnace with my mid-iron, and one of the kids has sawed my brassie in half for a walking stick. What did you do with my niblick? You remember I lent it to you a couple of weeks ago so you could knock some cobwebs out of the pantry, but that is the last I saw of it.

Well, I shined up what clubs I could find, and having a little polish left, commenced on the silverware. I took the bread-platter and sandpapered it down, but the doggone thing scratched. Perhaps we had better let the silverware wait until you get home.

Listen, I started sweeping the halls, but quit, inasmuch as I contracted to sweep the halls of a home and not a labyrinth.

HOBART.

Robmore Beach, Fla., Feb. 23rd.

Dearest Hobart: Just as I thought, you begin on your personal property; and if the house were to catch afire, you would grab a putter in one hand and a lofter in the other and run away congratulating yourself.

When I am home, you holler like a wild man to make sure I won't forget that our place contains a kitchen. You seem to have forgotten the kitchen yourself. Trot in and shampoo the floor.

You might buy some furniture for the living-room. I said furniture, not cigar cabinets.

GERT.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 26th.

DEAR GERT: Well, it certainly looks like spring up here, even the silverware is turning green.

Acting on your suggestion, I dropped into a furniture place today and picked out a combination radio set and washing machine. You can get Pittsburg on one side of the cabinet, and can give a fair imitation of Hongkong on the other. I figured this outfit would enable us to spend many delightful evenings together. I almost bought a new piano, but they come too high for an ornament.

I rearranged a few pictures, but forgot whether "Whistler's Mother" hung in the living-room or the sun parlor, so I have put her and your old man out in the hall and they make a fine pair sitting there glaring where there is cream for breakfast. For all the wind in the Salinas Valley seems unable to blow away the cows.

Then the cars stop and the people stumble in, to unpack cold creams and boracic acid, to doze through whatever of the day is left.

Martin turned the hotel register and glanced for a moment down the list of arrivals. Then he wrote Martin Barbery, Orange County, and below, Mr. G. T. Blood, Chicago.

"Two rooms," he ordered briefly.

"The garage is being painted, Mr. Barbery," the clerk explained. "I'm afraid the cars will have to remain in the court tonight. It's quite safe. There's no town nearer than Salinas and the through traffic—"

"Goes through," suggested Martin.

"Exactly. I could give you rooms on the court so you might keep an eye"—the clerk paused and looked over the edge of the desk. There, at the end of his stout steel chain, was seated Gyp the Blood.

The clerk was nonplussed. A dog was a dog, but the Motor Inn's grapefruit was shipped in special crates from the Barbery ranch. So the clerk, at a loss, scratched his head and whistled.

"It's a special dog, Mr. Barbery?"

"Very special."

"Well-behaved?" ventured the clerk feebly. "Won't bite the legs off any of the chairs?"

"He is, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion," said Martin gravely.

"AH Mr. Barbery," said the manager affably, emerging from an inner office and peering benevolently over the desk. "What have we here? Nice little doggle-woggle?"

Gyp the Blood, thus admonished, looked pained.

"Do we get the rooms?" asked Martin.

"But of course you get the rooms," said the manager.

There was cream for breakfast, floating, luscious, golden. The tourists swam in it. Even Gyp the Blood came in for a little which he lapped delicately, in a genteel manner, from a tablespoon. They sallied forth contentedly. The car came to life and they were on the road again.

But ahead on the highway several cars were drawn anxiously together in a small knot. There was a man with a notebook. There was a motorcycle policeman with a telegram. The Barbery car, curious, swung into line behind the others. There were arrivals and departures. Cars were searched, checked off, dismissed. New cars, crowding from the rear, were hemmed in. There was mild confusion.

"Nice little crowd you got today," said the man with the notebook, cheerfully, to three meager ladies in a tin coupe.

The meager ladies, who were also elderly, looked dismayed. One of them produced a driver's license from New Jersey.

"No, lady; we know you can drive," said the policeman, waving it aside. "What we want to know is, have you got any Chinese?"

The dismayed ladies grew demoralized.

"Do you mean—opium?" asked the driver with great perspicacity.

"NO, LADY," said the policeman patiently. "Chinamen. Smuggled over the border."

It appeared that among them they had seven postcards of the main street at Tiajuana. They were dismissed.

The policeman turned to Martin's car and stared. Hurriedly, he compared his telegram with Martin's license plate. Hurriedly he drew a rather large revolver, looked at it halfheartedly, and pointed it at Martin.

"Drive over," ordered the cop, climbing upon the running board.

The clustered cars dispersed. The man with the notebook rolled the motorcycle to the side of the road. The through traffic proceeded through, slowly at first but with gradual, quickening speed until no one looked back from the passing cars.

"I don't understand," said Martin.

The policeman spread out his telegram.

"The license numbers are the same," he explained, "990,803."

"But my number is 508,900," Martin protested.

The officer grinned reproachfully.

"You can't get by with that," said he. "Come and look. By the way, you're under arrest."

"For smuggling Chinamen?"

"Uh-huh."

"Where are the Chinamen?"

"Open the trunk, Pete," ordered the man with the notebook.

Martin felt a hand upon his arm.

"What has happened?" asked the girl in gray.

Martin turned, bewildered, and forgot the officer. For the girl in gray wasn't in gray this morning, but blue.

"Clelie," said Martin, "Clelie Moore. I saw your name on the hotel register. And I might have had you all one Sunday on the ranch."

"But you were in Portland," said the girl in gray.

"I was insane. I was upstairs, and you went away."

"You're Uncle Benny's nephew. I knew—in the tea room. I recognized Gyp the Blood."

"I stopped at San Claire to see you," said Martin. "I didn't see you. I stopped here last night, and you didn't come down for dinner. There was an open fire and I waited, but you didn't come down—"

"I was asleep—"

"Here, lady," the officer interrupted, "this guy's got to go to jail."

Clelie looked at him.

"Jail?"

"That's what I'm tellin' you, lady," said the officer wearily. "He's been caught smuggling Chinamen."

"Don't be foolish," said Clelie sensibly. "What would he do that for?"

"Ask yourself, lady," the policeman shrugged. "You've missed the point."

"What is the point?"

"The license plate," said the officer. They approached the front of the car where the license plate confronted them guiltily: 990,803.

"Hey!" cried the man with the notebook, appearing from behind the car. "The rear plate is what he said it was!"

"508,900?"

"508,900!"

"The smugglers changed the front one. But when—" Martin looked at Gyp the Blood seated, unconcerned, on the front seat. "At midnight," said Martin, thoughtfully, "in the court of the Motor Inn."

"You can't get by with that," repeated the officer.

"Clelie Moore," Martin sighed, "this uninteresting man is going to put me in the pen."

"I'll take the dog," said Clelie Moore.

Left alone, Martin pondered on the correct course to pursue in jail. He remembered actors with perfect profiles who strode toward cell windows and pined, thus, gazing at freedom. But Martin's window was so very small and so unnecessarily high, not much freedom could be seen out of it.

The sunlight paused narrowly on the wall. Outside, the highroad was deserted. It must be near noon, thought Martin. And then there was a muffled thud against the adobe wall and a jeweled hand grasped the bar in the window.

"OH, MARTIN, I'm coming up," said a breathless voice and another hand reached for the bar. There was a clambering sonnd outside and Clelie appeared at the window. She leaned against the bars and smiled precipitously down at Martin.

"Darling," said Martin, "what are you standing on?"

"A ladder. It's quite solid except when it wobbles."

"I missed a month of this."

"What's a month?" demanded Clelie. "But I would have liked to see the ranch."

"Darling. You'll see the ranch," promised Martin.

"You mustn't say 'darling,'" Clelie protested vaguely, "or I'll have to notice it. Let me tell you the news. There's lots and lots. I 'phoned Uncle Benny and Gyppie ate an apple. Uncle Benny's coming but he's simply furious, of course."

"Of course," said Martin.

Her hand hung down against the rough wall and Martin suddenly, foolishly, illogically, laid his cheek against it.

"Please, love me a little," said Martin.

Clelie reached down her other hand and patted the top of his head.

"A French chateau by a green lake," said Martin blindly. "Clelie."

"I—I don't like French chateaux." Clelie hesitated. "I like screens in my windows. I like sunlight."

"I have—plenty of sunlight. All there is."

"I like grapefruit."

Martin looked up at her adoringly.

"Little marquise," said Martin, "I knew you in the tea room."

"That was yesterday," said Clelie, shocked. "Only a day—"

A familiar voice came from the foot of the ladder.

"Hey, lady," said the familiar voice, "you can't get away with that."

"GOOD-BY," whispered Clelie. "But there is much I have to tell you. It'll take all my life"——

"Well, ain't you got all your life, lady?" asked the voice below. "They've caught the crooks in San Jose. I'll let this fella out. Only you gotta put the ladder back."

"Oh, hush," ordered Clelie. "Martin, did you know that the old man—in the tea room—the one with the canes—was Uncle Benny? And that our Gyp the Blood—"

"I guessed Uncle Benny," said Martin serenely. "Town cars are few on the Coast Route. But who is our Gyp the Blood?"

Clelie laughed and clambered down.

"Who," called Martin, "is Gyp the Blood?"

"The champion."

"Of Chicago?"

"Of the world," said Clelie Moore.

Martin leaned against the wall and listened. But her footsteps, departing, were drowned in the roar of the road. For the cars, once more, were going through.

THE COVER

Characteristic of the Dutch national school in painting is "The New Dress," by Bernard Pothast, which is reproduced upon the cover of this issue of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine by courtesy of the Noonan-Kocian galleries. Pothast is one of the foremost Dutch painters of the present time, a devout follower in the footsteps of Josef Israels, although he is a painter of marked individuality. The painting reproduced has just been imported by Noonan-Kocian.

From the very beginnings of the Dutch school these quiet glimpses of home life have been characteristic of the painters of the lowlands. A view through the bit of window in the upper left-hand corner of the painting reveals the green and color of a garden in the sunshine. That sunshine lights the interior, with its warm-toned walls, which, with the purple dress the mother wears and the red tile of the floor, gives amethystine tone to the canvas. Below the window is a table at which the mother sits, with her white cap, her brown hair, her purple gown and her blue apron. At her knee is the child in white undergarments, the new green dress at hand, ready to be worn for the first time. On the table is a bowl of summer flowers. Against the wall is a quaint old dresser, with a copper bowl upon it. Subtly, gently, the painter has brought his colors, the red, the green, the blue and the purple, into relation with each other and the result is a placidity, an atmosphere of quiet home life which does not need the anecdotal aspect of the picture to impress upon the beholder the spirit of home life which brought it forth and that quiet love of home which is the characteristic of Dutch art. —H. Asthma Made Her Life a Burden Found Real Way to End Trouble. Has Been Well Ever Since.
Sufferers from asthma and stubborn bronchial coughs will find unusual interest in a letter written by Mrs. Anna Wuelfing, 3541 Garland Ave., Detroit, Mich., regarding her mother, Mrs. Anna Ihlik. She writes:
"In 1923 my mother contracted bronchitis and asthma. She wasn't able to rest day or night or do any work. She would get terrible coughing and asthma spells and perspiration would drip from her head. At times we thought she would not get over it. When warm weather came instead of getting relief, she got worse. In August I gave up my work to take care of her and on the 7th of August, 1924, started giving her Nacor. From that day she has not had any asthma since, and in two weeks she was able to go to bed and rest all night and finally she stopped coughing. She has gained steadily in strength and weight and is able to take care of our home again. Nacor has made her a new woman, although it seems almost impossible."
Hundreds of people who suffered for years from asthma, bronchitis and severe chronic coughs have told how their trouble left and never returned. Their letters and a booklet of vital and interesting information about these serious diseases will be sent free by Nacor Medicine Co., 542 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind. The more serious your case, the more important this free information may be to you. Write for it today.

Shingle Bob

ed had it not been Lena's day for a haircut. She slipped into the shop at 4, having an hour off from the Coffee Shoppe, and before H. George could organize his excuses for the evening, she had waved art into the background.

"Didja know Harry Kelly's orchestra's goin' to be at the New Crystal tonight?" she asked, as H. George ran the comb down the back of her little head.

That settled it. The dancing was taken for granted. He was in a rut; every evening of his leisure was marked for him. Tonight it was fox-trotting at the New Crystal; tomorrow he and Lena would go out to the New Public Natatorium and swim; the next night the bill at the New Paradise would be changed and they would go there, and from there to the Sugar Bowl. That was why men didn't get things done. No wonder he had never become a playwright.

THREE weeks passed, and the only tangible work done on "The Iron Hook" was its title inscribed on the first sheet of a large tablet of writing paper H. George bought in the drug store of the New Trianon when he went home to dress for the dance at the New Crystal. He was glad he had done that much, for the next day Mrs. Gracie had come to the barber shop and after waiting for him for more than an hour had said softy, as he pinned the apron around her:

"How is our play coming?"

She had said "our" play, and H. George, flushing and slightly trembling, had been able to answer huskily:

"I'm working on it."

With a sweep of his artist's hand he had opened his drawer and had handed her to read, while she was in the chair, that copy of the first number of "The American Jupiter," which she admired so much.

"I'm going to New York tomorrow," Mrs. Gracie had said. "I wish you could go, too. You would appreciate it so; it would mean so much to you to get the atmosphere."

If she had seen him entering the Sugar Bowl with Lena the incident had made no difference. She was broader and finer than the ordinary woman.

"You're lucky you can lead your own life," he said, examining the crinkly blond hair behind her little ear and taking away a fraction of an inch with his unerring precision.

"You can, too," she answered crisply. "You must. I want you to. Get your play done while I am gone."

If Mrs. Ellington P. Gracie had encouraged the art of the playwright she had also done her work well as a patron of the art tonsorial. The word she had dropped to Mrs. Harold Naylor and Mrs. John P. Lurcher on the veranda of the Jonesville Country Club was only beginning to bear results, but already the inundation of candidates for the shingled head threatened to destroy H. George Chadwick. Many of the customers, unable to wait for hours, overflowed into the other chairs, where, if they did not get a Chadwick shingle, they had the pleasure of watching H. George at work. Practically the entire membership of the Wednesday Afternoon Bridge Club appeared shingled a week after the club met with Edie Naylor.

The evenings found H. George in a weakened condition, with no heart to begin on the first act of "The Iron Hook." Days rushed by, and "The Iron Hook" still remained unstarted.

One morning he was met by a curious situation. For the first time in months, astonishing and unwelcome leisure awaited him in the barber shop. Instead of a dozen feminine heads to work on before luncheon, he had only three and the other barbers had none. With two pairs of masculine jowls to shave and one masculine haircut, his tips and cash record for the day promised little. The long afternoon was slightly better, but not much. No line of beauties sat and waited for him. The difference was so marked that the other barbers offered ponderous jests about his sudden loss of customers. By evening H. George was glad to mow a two-day beard. Something had happened in Jonesville. He must get that play started tonight.

In his room he sat before his tablet and tried to summon those opening lines for "The Iron Hook." They would not come. He kept thinking of that empty bench in the New Trianon barber shop and the desertion of the girls. Another night went by with the play unstarted.

The morning brought only two shingles, and he went out to luncheon at the New Apollo Cafe hurt and wondering. At this rate he would be only a barber by the end of the week; moreover, his earnings would show a sharp decline.

Crossing Belleau boulevard on his way back to the shop, H. George was startled out of his dejected ponderings by a sharp horn behind him, and he sprang to the curb just in time to avoid being crushed under the wheels of a swift sports roadster. His narrow escape from death, however, as he stood there looking after the car, did not occur to him. Something more tragic than that penetrated the core of his being. The driver of the car was Mrs. Ellington P. Gracie, and she had not recognized him; either that, or she had chosen to ignore him. She was back in town and she hadn't let him know. Wounded and discouraged, he crept back to the shop and sat in line with the other barbers, waiting.

THE afternoon yielded one girl customer—Lena. She came down from the Coffee Shoppe and slipped into his chair in the old way, but the zest of the occasion for H. George was lacking. Lena ran her hand over the back of her head reflectively and smiled into the mirror.

"Don't trim it too close," she said. "This may be the last time. I'm goin' to let it grow in."

H. George paused, apron in hands.

"Let it grow in? What's the big idea?"

"Why, haven't you heard? The shingle bob's done. Long hair's comin' back. I'm sorry, in a way; it'll lose money for you. But, you know, there's something kinda nice about long hair. I'm kinda glad the style's changin'."

H. George swallowed air.

"Where did you get that stuff? Who said long hair's coming back?" he asked.

"Why, all the swells is lettin' theirs grow. Mrs. Ellington P. Gracie started it; she come back from New York last week, an' she told it at the Country Club that long hair'd be the thing from now on. It's got all over town. You know Mrs. Gracie; she's swell. She's lettin' hers grow."

Rather mechanically H. George pinned the apron around her neck and reached for his shears.

"Gee! I'll be glad when this stuff's grown in. I wish I hadn't had it bobbed now."

H. George sighed and looked at the "waiting bench." It was empty.

"Whaja say we go out Sunday and look at some o' them lots I told you about?" Lena asked presently. "With what I got an' what you got, we could start a bungalow, the man says."

He did not answer immediately. He was thinking about "The Iron Hook," lying unwritten on his table.

"WHEN did you say this long-hair stuff started?" he muttered when he could control his voice.

"Oh, a week or ten days ago. One o' the girls from the Coffee Shoppe was out at the Country Club waitin' table at a tea, and Mrs. Gracie was tellin' 'em. An' she told 'em she had discovered a musical genius in New York and was goin' to bring 'im here for a concert next winter. Just a kid—runs an elevator in a hotel, I think she said."

H. George paused with his scissors suspended. He stood for a long minute.

"Let's go out there and look at them lots Sunday," he said, brushing some stray ends of hair from Lena's shoulders, a vague hint of tenderness in the gesture. He handed her a cashier's check and began putting away his tools. Then, reminded by a wicked flash of memory, he opened his drawer and took out his copy of the first number of "The American Jupiter." He handed it to Lena.

"Drop this in the waste-paper baler when you go back," he said.

Lena inspected the magazine eagerly.

"Throw it away, nothin'," she exclaimed. "This is worth money. Mr. Silverthorne—you know he's sorta lit'ry—well, he comes int' the Coffee Shoppe for his meals an' he was telling me about this. He says copies o' the first issue's worth about $15? I'll get 'im to see about sellin' it for us."

H. George swayed slightly.

"What's on at the New Paradise tonight?" he asked.

at each other. I would hate to have "Whistler's Mother" for mine, as her arm has a shape like a Louisville slugger. She looks as if she were waiting for the opening gong.

By the way, as I was reaching for one picture, the ladder slipped and I fell, knocking over the gold-fish bowl. Most of the fish got away, but I grabbed a few and looked around for a place to put them, but there wasn't anything except a can of veneer, so I dropped them in this can and beat it out to the kitchen. I had a hard time finding anything appropriate, so finally put the goldfish in your chafing dish.

I won't fall any more, as I have sprinkled ashes on the floor to prevent the ladder from skidding.

HOBART.

ROBMORE BEACH, Fla., Feb. 28th.

Dear Hobart: Beat the rugs and I will forgive you. GERT.

P. S.—Don't beat them in the house.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 2nd.

Dear Gertie: Well, I commenced beating rugs the other day. I tried to hang them on the clothesline, but the clothesline broke, so I rigged up a wire and threw the rugs across and flayed them with the flat of a shovel. I left the rugs outside over night for a thorough airing.

Only an unfortunate thing happened. During the night a severe storm came up and blew the rugs all over the neighborhood. I collected all of them except that blue one from the living room, which got blown up to the roof and fell right over the chimney. The chimney was smothered and the house is now full of smoke and I am choking my head off to beat the band.

I tried to get the rug off of the chimney, but tripped while walking across the roof and knocked off about four yards of guttering. What is the name of that guy who put up our guttering last fall? I have all the windows open to let the smoke out of the house and it is pretty cold here, so I am sitting around in an overcoat.

By the way, most of your curtains are pretty black on account of the smoke, but I guess I can beat them as I beat the rugs.

I forgot to tell you about the dining-room table. I polished it with what I thought was veneer, but the table looks kind of pale, and I am inclined to think I used some kind of stain remover by mistake. You know that picture of Sir Galahad and the horse? Well, after I had hung that yesterday a heavy truck rattled down the street and the house shook and the picture fell down and I stumbled when trying to pick it up and my foot went right through Sir Galahad's face. Oh, well, I can get you another knight any old day.

Don't worry, as everything will be all right by the time you get home. I think that rug will blow off of the chimney pretty soon as the paper says the storm will continue.

on most veteran performers. She has never become a good sport nor yet an athlete. Mlle. Lenglen never once suggests the wholesome outdoor girl. She keeps her pallor even in the middle of the most strenuous campaigns. Her health is by no means annoyingly excellent.

Reporters have been often moved to speak of Helen Wills as the possessor of a poker face. That term is less than happy. It represents careless observation of true gambling countenances. Immobility I associate only with minor players.

I have no doubt that Miss Wills is a young woman of much charm, but from the pictures in the Sunday papers it is hard to escape the impression that she is most markedly wholesome. That charge cannot be made against Mlle. Lenglen. Even on the court she seems like one who for a little while plays truant from lights, music, gayety and the pace which kills. She moves through one of the most exacting of all strenuous games and remains in appearance morbid.

That is a triumph. And it has significance. Many cover court better than Lenglen. Helen Wills can slam a ball with greater power. Suzanne has made a trick of tennis. It is not exercise when she plays, but a subtle game. There she stands, every inch a Borgia, even though God's bright sunlight and cleansing winds seek to make her one of nature's noblewomen.

When Lenglen wins, the spectator goes away impressed by the finesse and shrewdness of which the human mind may be capable. He does not say, "Ah, yes, after such an exhibition of physical prowess I must take thought and do my daily dozen each morning, at the same time being much more cautious in the matter of nicotine and alcohol."

No, indeed. Suzanne is the finest of all champions, for she avoids the reproach of being an ideal or good example to anyone.

No wide-awake, life-loving woman wants to be classed as an "old lady" . . . be crowded out by younger women . . . relegated to the shelf. If this is happening to you read what I tell you here . . . accept free trial offer . . . you'll learn how to get back your youth! Then . . . get rid of all the gray and stage a glorious come-back!

Wear your hair any way you want to . . . when you've restored natural color.

You can look as young as this—if you'll stop the gray.

A Youth Talk

By MARY T. GOLDMAN

I'M not going to waste time talking about the tragedy of gray hair, because you're living it. You don't need me to tell you that your pretty, fresh face and youthfully slim figure are entirely overshadowed by the aging effect of graying locks. It's the same old story . . . the world calls you middle-aged if your hair is gray.

But . . . why be gray, in these progressive times? Now the clever woman finds the way to look as young as she would like to be. She turns back the clock to 25, then stops it!

The first step is scientific yet simple treatment which restores hair to the original, becoming color of youth. It's the method employed by stars of the stage and screen, society leaders and business women who simply can't afford to be gray.

When you have read my explanation, fill out and mail coupon. It proves that every word I say is absolutely true . . . that a clean, transparent liquid, clear as water, restores the natural color to gray hair.

A Dainty Hair Cosmetic

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer . . . the famous preparation which I am proud to have known by my name . . . is no relation whatever to the crude dyes which no refined woman is willing to use.

It's perfectly colorless . . . nothing to wash or rub off. No interference with shampooing . . . nothing to soil hat lining or pillow.

Restored color even and so natural that no one will ever guess your secret. Bright sunlight, strong electric light . . . they simply reveal the new beauty which is yours.

Gray Hair Is Unfashionable

It's out of place and out of date in this age of youth, when all women dress alike . . . daughters, mothers, even grandmothers.

Restore natural color . . . get rid of the gray . . . and you'll pass as a young woman. You can wear the smart, youthful styles which are so becoming . . . keeping youth in your heart as well as looking young!

The streaking, discoloration, mortifying dyed look which follows the use of unsatisfactory dyes . . . don't fear any of these! On the contrary, use Mary T. Goldman's to correct such misfortune, if you have had bad luck in previous attempts to stop gray hair.

My restorer is in wide use as a general beautifier . . . to brighten dull, drab-looking hair . . . to change red hair into auburn . . . to transform light hair into gold.

Treatment leaves your hair silky and glossy, ready for a beautiful wave. All women will envy, all men admire, your youthful, well-groomed, lovely hair.

Best of All—Application Easy

No need to call for help from family or friends—no dependence on the skill of a hairdresser.

Application is so easy that you do it yourself . . . quickly and with perfect satisfaction. You simply comb Mary T. Goldman's through your hair until it is damp. (Application comb supplied.) And, while you comb, gray disappears, natural color returns.

Soon the miracle is accomplished . . . every silver thread is gone . . . your hair is again as young looking, as attractive, as when you were eighteen. Occasional treatment will keep it looking just this way the rest of your life. You'll forget you ever were gray.

Now, Mail Trial Bottle Coupon

Fill out coupon carefully, enclose lock of hair in your letter. By return mail you'll receive Special Patented Free Trial Kit, containing free trial bottle, special application comb, with full directions for testing on single lock of hair.

When you've made this single-lock test . . . when it proves the truth of every statement . . . when you know, positively, that you can get rid of the gray easily, safely, surely . . . then how eager you will be for complete restoration!

The next step? Visit your druggist for full-size bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. If he can't supply you . . . if he offers a "just-as-good" . . . order direct. You'll find an order blank enclosed in the free trial kit for your convenience.

Now, fill out and mail the coupon. Learn without delay how to stop that gray and be young again!

The magic-working darts - the tucks of fashion - are exclusive and patented features of the International "NAMELESS." They allow for ease and lithe graceful comfort in the movement of the body. Yet, they hold the figure giving it a hitherto unachieved straight smoothness that breathes the spirit of fashion. This garment eliminates all the heavy stays of the old style corset, but gives support to the abdomen and diaphragm. The International "NAMELESS" alone has the magic working darts. Be sure these darts are in the front of the garment you buy.

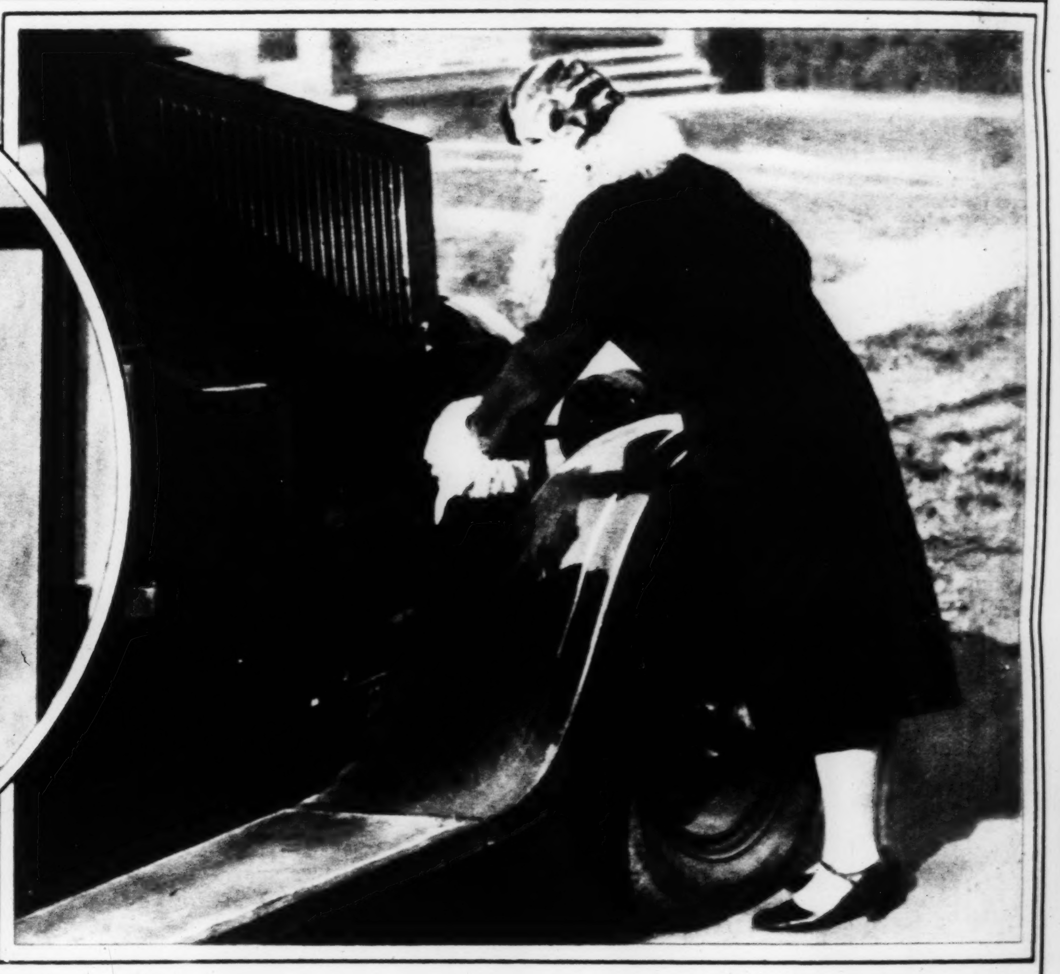
"I AM AN OSTEOPATHIC PHYSICIAN. About six months ago I began to feel all out of sorts and generally run down. I attributed this condition to constipation and overwork. I began taking Fleischmann's Yeast, and have continued until the present time. I am now in fine physical condition. My constipation is cured. I am recommending Fleischmann's Yeast daily to many of my patients."

Ernest M. Herring, D. O., New York City



"'ISN'T FRANCES' COMPLEXION BAD?' These words came to me from the next room where several girls were talking. I realized I must do something to better my skin. A friend suggested Fleischmann's Yeast. I started to take two cakes a day. To my amazement in three months my face and neck were clear."

Frances La Garde, Cincinnati, Ohio

Thrilling Victories for Health

Constipation conquered—youthful vitality regained—all by eating one simple food

NOT a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense—Fleischmann's Yeast is simply a remarkable fresh food.

The millions of tiny active yeast plants in every cake invigorate the whole system. They aid digestion—clear the skin—banish the poisons of constipation. Where cathartics give only temporary relief, yeast strengthens the intestinal muscles and makes them healthy and active. And day by day it releases new stores of energy.

Eat two or three cakes regularly every day before meals: on crackers—in fruit juices, water or milk—or just plain, nibbled from the cake. For constipation especially, dissolve one cake in hot water (not sclading) before breakfast and at bedtime. Buy several cakes at a time—they will keep fresh in a cool dry place for two or three days. All grocers have Fleischmann's Yeast. Start eating it today!

And let us send you a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health. Health Research Dept. N-905, The Fleischmann Co., 701 Washington St., New York.

"AFTER A WINTER spent in the constant social activities of New York, I found myself in a seriously run-down condition. I was completely worn out. A friend advised Fleischmann's Yeast. I began by eating three cakes a day. I soon felt noticeably better. My condition steadily improved. Now, thanks to Fleischmann's Yeast, I can dance all night and still feel fine the next day."

Nathalie Travers, New York City

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

THIS FAMOUS FOOD tones up the entire system—aids digestion—clears the skin—banishes constipation.

"ABOUT THREE YEARS AGO, I was taken suddenly ill. The Chesapeake and Ohio doctor was called. He said it was my stomach. I grew worse. I lived on medicine. About three months ago I began taking Fleischmann's Yeast. Now I can eat anything. The round house foreman told me that all the boys are remarking on my improved appearance. I have made a great many converts to Fleischmann's Yeast."

A "Butterworth Calender" essential to the finish of sateens, was specially imported to America for this purpose.

The process was so successful that it has never been varied tho' results have been improved—due to the better application of dyes—producing the brighter, softer tones of today.

"Such a delicious odor arises from the package."

"ITS fresh fruit taste and fruit fragrance, make it the most delicious gelatin we have ever had," cries a woman from New Rochelle. From West Virginia, "We voted it absolutely perfect."

Its superlative difference lies in the flavor, made only from fresh fruit. No "synthetics" or artificial flavorings are used. A motorcycle isn't a closed car

REM "delivers" cough relief here

The driver of a motorcycle is riding in the teeth of a stiff gale all the time, and in raw, changeable weather, he's apt to get a cough.

Mr. Thomas Rivetti of 2525 Washington Ave., New York City, drives a motorcycle in connection with his work of delivering telegrams, and last winter he caught a mighty bad cough.

Maybe you can guess what helped him get rid of it:

> "I am out delivering telegrams on my motorcycle day and night, rain or shine, and I do hit some tough weather! Last winter particularly was a cuckoo, and I got a cough then that lasted for almost a week. I went across the street to Wallach's, 207th St. & 10th Ave., and asked Doc to give me a good cough medicine. He sold me Rem. I took it and it got rid of my cough in no time. Now I know what to ask for when I get a cough."

REM's quick action in so many cases is largely due to a special ingredient — effective, harmless — not found in ordinary cough syrups. Clinging to your throat as it is swallowed, REM quickly begins its work of quieting your cough.

No Opiates in REM. And it's pleasant to take.

Ask your Druggist for REM—the blue package with the round orange label. You can have your money back if you want it—but you won't!

Restful Nights Wide-awake Days

A new Swiss food-drink . . . a natural way to sound, restful sleep that stores up all-day energy

When you go to bed do your nerves stay up? Leaving you dragged out on the morrow—your mornings logy, your energies drained by afternoon.

Modern science has found a natural way to overcome this—a way without drugs—to sound, restful sleep that quickly restores your tired mind and body.

Morning finds you a new man. Fresh, clear-eyed, buoyant. You have the energy to carry you right through the day and into the evening.

A 3-day test will show you. We urge you to make this test. It is well worth while.

Sound sleep—active days

Taken at night, a cup of Ovaltine brings sound, restful sleep and all-day energy quickly and naturally. This is why:

FIRST—it combines in easily digested form, certain vitalizing and building-up food essentials in which your daily fare is lacking. One cup of Ovaltine has more real food value than 12 cups of beef extract.

SECOND—Ovaltine has the power actually to digest 4 to 5 times its weight in other foods which may be in your stomach. Thus, a few minutes after drinking, Ovaltine is turning itself and all other foods into rich, red blood.

This quick assimilation of nourishment is restoring to the entire body. Frayed nerves are soothed. Digestion goes on efficiently. Restful sleep comes. And as you sleep you gather strength and energy.

Hospitals and doctors recommend it

Ovaltine is a delightful pure food drink. In use in Switzerland for 30 years. Now in universal use in England and its colonies. During the great war it was included as a standard war ration for invalid soldiers.

A few years ago Ovaltine was introduced into this country. Today hundreds of hospitals use it. More than 20,000 doctors recommend it. Not only as a restorative, but also for malnutrition, nerve-strain, convalescence, backward children and the aged.

Just make a 3-day test of Ovaltine. Note the difference, not only in your sleep, but in your next day's energy. You tackle your work with greater vigor. You "carry through" for the whole day. You aren't too tired to go out for the evening. There's a new zest to your work; to all of your daily activities. It's truly a "pick-up" drink for any time of day.

A 3-day test

Drug stores sell Ovaltine in 4 sizes for home use. Or drink it at soda fountains. But to let you try it we will send you a 3-day introductory package for 10 cents to cover cost of packing and mailing. Just send in the coupon with 10 cents.

MISS ANNE MORGAN points the way to the business Women of America

THIS photographic study of Miss Morgan, made in Paris by Baron de Meyer, reflects the powerful personality she inherits from her distinguished father, founder of the great banking firm, J. P. Morgan and Company.

AMONG the many women who are my friends a high standard of personality always demands physical as well as moral and mental development and care. Whether their interests lie in business, professional or social activities these women desire always that their complexions should be clear and vigorous. So many achieve this end by following the Pond's Method that I should like to see the dressing rooms of our new Club House of the American Woman's Association equipped with Pond's Two Creams.

Anne Morgan

ABOVE, Miss Morgan's Paris apartment, full of the same informal charm that pervades her New York house. When in neither of them, she is likely to be in Scotland for golf or hunting or at one of the smart continental resorts. But when a big cause calls her, Miss Morgan drops all personal pursuits and gives it the brilliant endeavor of her heart and mind.

ANNE MORGAN is unique among the women of America. Born to unlimited wealth and position of unequalled rank, she has dedicated her life to great achievements for humanity.

Having inherited the organizing genius of her celebrated father, she might, like him, had she been a man, have expressed it in the world of finance.

But Miss Morgan is a woman. Her greatest interest is the welfare of other women. And because she believes that business women are on the high-road to success she is investing her faith and energy in their behalf.

She knows that their lasting success will result from well-balanced living that has made no sacrifice of womanliness and charm. And she knows that they believe this, too.

So in planning the equipment of the new Club House of the American Woman's Association—the finest thing of its kind and a project in which Miss Morgan is deeply interested—she thinks even of the details that will accord with the personal tastes and contribute to the more attractive appearance of its members.

Knowing that so many beautiful women everywhere today achieve a clear and vigorous complexion by following the Pond's Method, Miss Morgan declares:

"I should like to see the dressing rooms of our new Club House of the American Woman's Association equipped with Pond's Two Creams."

POND'S

THE TWO CREAMS DISTINGUISHED WOMEN USE

THE FIRST STEP in the Pond's Method of caring for the skin is a deep, thorough cleansing with Pond's Cold Cream. Every day, always after any exposure, and before retiring at night, smooth Pond's Cold Cream lavishly over your face, neck, arms and hands. Let it stay on a few moments. Its pure oils will sink down into the pores and bring to the surface the dust, powder and excess oil which clog them.

Wipe off all the cream and dirt. Repeat the process and finish by closing the pores with a dash of cold water or a rub with ice. Now look at your skin—as fresh as a new-blown rose!

THE SECOND STEP is a soft finish and protection with Pond's Vanishing Cream. Fluff on just the least bit of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Now see how soft and even the surface of your skin is—your face, your throat, your hands. The Vanishing Cream has smoothed away all roughness, has given you a soft, bright, clear tone.

Notice how smoothly this cream takes your powder and rouge, and how well it makes them cling to your skin.

So you should always use Pond's Vanishing Cream before you powder. And with particular care before you go out, too. For it adds not only a soft finish but a protection from unfriendly wind, dust, cold, sun and soot.

MISS MORGAN'S deep interest in the women of America is again expressed by her activities in behalf of the nineteen-story club house to be erected on West 23rd Street, New York City, by the American Woman's Association. It will cost $4,500,000.00 and will contain besides its club rooms, a thousand private rooms with bath, to rent at $10.00 to $16.00 per week. This intimate sketch of the garden terrace suggests the personality and charm with which its sponsors have endowed it.

If your skin is oily, and likewise if it is dry, cleanse it more frequently with Pond's Cold Cream. Dryness is also relieved if you pat some of the cream on at night, after your bed-time cleansing, and leave it until morning.

And no matter what the nature of your skin, it will be made velvety and kept fresh and unlined by the finish and protection of Pond's Vanishing Cream.

Buy your own Pond's Creams and follow the method used by so many distinguished women to keep their complexions fresh and vigorous. The Cold Cream comes in extra large jars, both Creams in two smaller sizes of jars and in tubes.

THOMPSON AND FORBES MUST GO TO PENITENTIARY

Supreme Court Refuses to Review Conviction of Ex-Veterans' Bureau Head and St. Louisan.

RICH CONTRACTOR ILL IN HOSPITAL

Attorneys Prepared to Take Some Action to Forestall His Arrest Because of Physical Condition.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—Charles R. Forbes, former director of the Veterans' Bureau, and John W. Thompson, millionaire St. Louis contractor, convicted at Chicago of conspiracy in connection with hospital contracts, were today denied a review by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Forbes and Thompson were each sentenced to terms of two years in Leavenworth penitentiary and fines of $10,000.

The grounds advanced in support of their petition to the Supreme Court were substantially those advanced without success in the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Those included the alleged "illegal search and seizure of paper, the insufficiency of the evidence, the acceptance of the testimony of Elias H. Mortimer, the principal Government witness, and the attack upon the jurisdiction of the Federal Court at Chicago to try the case, it being asserted that the alleged conspiracy had not been formed there and that no act had been shown to have been committed there in carrying it into effect.

The Supreme Court's refusal to review the Forbes-Thompson case exhausts the legal resources of the defendants to overcome their conviction.

It is now in order for a mandate to be issued by the Circuit Court of Appeals, ordering Thompson and Forbes taken to Leavenworth penitentiary, but it is understood counsel for Thompson is prepared to take some action to forestall this because of Thompson's physical condition.

Thompson is now at St. Luke's Hospital, following an operation for hernia performed March 2. He had undergone similar operations last November and a year and a half ago, and his physicians have said he is suffering from an impaired heart condition.

PROFFIT'S ISLAND BROUGHT PROFIT TO THOMPSON

Output of Sand and Gravel Plant There About $500,000 Annually.

THE swirling current of the Mississippi, in the ship-channel depths of the Louisiana bayou section, swept money into the pockets of John W. Thompson.

Two miles above the river town of Baton Rouge is Proffit's Island, as it has long been known locally. But in Thompson's speech and writing, the name is "Profit Island." He has called it so, for good cause, since he has been reaping the profit from its inexhaustible stores of sand and gravel.

Dredging machinery, installed by Thompson on the island, brings up from the river daily about 40 carloads of gravel, serviceable for highway building and railroad ballast. As fast as the gravel is taken out, the river puts more in its place.

The Annual Output.

Barges carry the gravel to the west shore — the Mississippi has "shores" in that lordly section—and loading machinery is used in getting it on the cars. The output of the plant is said to bring approximately a half-million dollars a year. The railroads of the region, and the State and parish road-building bodies, are the chief customers. Because of its quality, "Profit Island" gravel has commanded a higher price than gravel from other sources in that region.

Thompson holds the island on a lease, paying a royalty to the owners. His brother, R. A. Thompson of New Orleans, manages the business for him.

The beginning of this enterprise, some 20 years ago, was also the beginning of Thompson's wealth.
